

Clash of the Titans:

A Comparative Approach to Reform of Judicial Accountability in Egypt

*Shams Al Din Al Hajjaji

ABSTRACT:

This Article argues for the reform of judicial accountability rules in Egypt. The lack of a real separation of powers and “checks and balances” between the three powers often leads the judiciary to become a periphery in the executive body, rather than an independent authority that invigilates and monitors any violation of the law. Judges who refuse to comply with executive wishes are often subjected to persecution from the Ministry of Justice and its Judicial Inspection Department, which can reach up to the level of impeachment. The Ministry of Justice uses judicial accountability as a tool of retribution over disobedient and inconsistent judges. Currently, the executive authority monopolizes the judicial accountability process and its outcomes. Reformation towards a transparent democratic judiciary requires major participation by the public in the judicial accountability process. This participation aims not only to exclude the authority of the Ministry of Justice over the judiciary and the judges, but it also aims to increase public participation in a democratic judiciary.

INTRODUCTION

Judicial reform ensures full protection of individuals' rights.¹ The judiciary is the last resort against outrageous aggression by the executive authority against citizens' rights.² In this respect, the lack of an independent and accountable judiciary is a hindrance. Independence and accountability are two indispensable factors required for judicial reform. They both form the core of solemn judicial reform.³ Furthermore, the lack of judicial accountability and independence could potentially jeopardize human rights and liberties.⁴ For example, interference by the Minister of Justice in judicial decision-making compromises judicial independence.⁵ On the other hand, a complete lack of judicial oversight and accountability could have the opposite effect—resulting in judicial corruption.⁶ Hence, this Article argues for reform of the judicial accountability process.

The topic of judicial accountability raises three main questions. Who is accountable? To whom? And for what? In a democratic system, the answer to the first question, “who is accountable,” is the judiciary, either institutionally or as judges individually.⁷ This Article, however, chooses not to address that question for two reasons. First, the definition of the judiciary is rather vague in Egypt.⁸ This ambiguity stems from nonjudicial bodies being judicial in nature, such as the Administrative Prosecution Office (APO),⁹ the Public Prosecution Office (PPO),¹⁰ the military

9. Article 197 of the Constitution of the Arab Republic states:

The Administrative Prosecution is an independent judicial body. It investigates financial and administrative irregularities, and those referred to it. Regarding these irregularities, it has the authorities vested in the administration body to inflict disciplinary penalties. Challenging its decisions takes place before the competent disciplinary court at the State Council. It also initiates and conducts proceedings and disciplinary appeals before the State Council courts in accordance with the law. All the foregoing is organized by law.

judiciary,¹¹ the State Case Authority (SCA),¹² as well as the delegates in the Supreme Constitutional Court (SCC).¹³ Second, the judiciary is the competent authority for holding its members accountable.¹⁴ It is not clear, however, who has the right to hold the institution accountable for its actions.¹⁵ This approach needs reform.¹⁶

The answer to the second question, “to whom is the judiciary accountable,” is debatable. There are three general bodies to whom the judiciary can be held accountable. First, the judiciary can be held accountable directly to the public.¹⁷ This system is based on judicial appointment through elections.¹⁸ The public is considered the cornerstone of judicial independence because it is the source of judicial power and judicial accountability—it has the power to eliminate judges through elections.¹⁹ Second, the judiciary can be held accountable to executive authorities (authoritarian or monarchical regimes),²⁰ legislative authorities

(the U.S. example),²¹ or both (the German example).²² These methods ensure the principle of checks and balances between the judiciary on the one side and the executive and legislative authorities on the other.²³ Third, the judiciary can be accountable to itself. This is an unconventional method that the Egyptian judiciary employs, and it is reflected in its Constitution.²⁴

As for the third question of “what holds a judge accountable,” there are three types of actions that judges are held accountable for: disciplinary, political, and legal actions.²⁵ In terms of disciplinary actions, Egypt’s Constitution grants each judicial institution the right to oversee disciplinary procedures involving its own members.²⁶ In theory, the executive and the legislative authorities do not have any right to participate in such a process.²⁷ In practice, the Ministry of Justice (MoJ) and its Judicial Inspection Department (JID) are the competent authorities that initiate disciplinary procedures against judges, prosecutors, and members of other judicial institutions.²⁸ This incongruity is because the Minister of Justice and JID members are judges, who are selected with the approval of the Supreme Judicial Council (SJC).²⁹

In the United States, the judiciary is part of the political process.³⁰ This is because U.S. judges are either politically affiliated or they run for election.³¹ They are permitted to participate in the political process, regardless of whether they are state or federal judges.³² This is due to the role played by politics and the public in the judicial independence process, and its accountability and appointment processes.³³ In Egypt, the Judicial Authority Law (JAL) bans judges and the court from declaring their political affiliation.³⁴ The law does not, however, specify a disciplinary action for violating this ban.³⁵ This opens the door to arbitrary punishments for judges, as shown in the following sections. This is due to the lack of integration in the political process, and as a result, judges have been forced to participate in politics.

In terms of legal violations, it is widely accepted that judges enjoy a limited amount of immunity from civil procedures that result from their work as judges.³⁶ There is disagreement regarding criminal immunity of judges for crimes committed during court sessions,³⁷ but there is widespread consensus that judges are not immune from civil and criminal liability for actions committed in their personal lives.³⁸ However, the Constitution and the JAL provide judicial immunity for all judicial institutions, including the SCC and the ordinary and administrative judiciary.³⁹ In the event of having committed a crime, judges will not be arrested or held on remand unless the SJC issues a warrant for their arrest.⁴⁰ The SJC has the right to issue an arrest against any judge, if members of the council ascertain that a judge has committed a criminal violation.⁴¹ The SJC is the competent authority that decides whether a judge should be remanded in custody or released on bail.⁴²

Moreover, judicial accountability triggers the question of the separation of powers between judges and the Judicial Accountability Power, which has the right to hold the judiciary accountable.⁴³ Although most universal jurisdictions, like the United States and Germany, separate clearly between powers, the Egyptian judiciary unifies them.⁴⁴ The absence of a separation of powers and a checks and balances system makes it difficult to understand the accountability of the judiciary.⁴⁵ The Minister of Justice in Egypt enjoys a mixed role, based on both his judicial and executive functions.⁴⁶ On an executive level, the Minister of Justice is part of the Cabinet.⁴⁷ The President of the Republic appoints the Minister of Justice from the ordinary judiciary upon consultation with the Prime Minister.⁴⁸ As for the judicial aspect of the MoJ, this is based on the nature of the Minister of Justice and its senior officials, who work in the ministry. All senior officials are judges, whose work is performed on a time-bound secondment,⁴⁹ basis granted by their respective courts to the MoJ.⁵⁰ In other words, the executive authority uses members of the judiciary as a tool for retribution against dissenting judges.⁵¹ Hence, the unification between the judiciary and its Judicial Accountability Power gives rise to many questions that this Article endeavors to address.

This Article aims, first, to prove that the current rules of accountability are inadequate and lead to partiality and subjectivity against judges in Egypt. Due to the scarcity of literature on this topic, related research is based on the testimony of several members of the judiciary that was later made public. Second, this research aims to propose a reform for the dilemma of judicial accountability. The solution lies in both reforming the rules and the authority of accountability. The rules lack transparency and clarity, and open the door for the executive authority to violate judicial independence. The authority of accountability, which includes the MoJ and the SJC, lack any form of democratic formulation. Consequently, the rule of accountability needs to be addressed.

This Article consists of three sections. The first tackles the current legal process of judicial accountability in Egypt, including complaints, proceedings, and disciplinary actions. It also deals with the question of the separation of powers regarding judicial accountability. The second section of this Article proposes reforming judicial accountability considering the contemporary challenges facing Egypt. Finally, this Article proposes several reformations to the judicial accountability rules in Egypt. These reformations ensure public participation in both judicial independence and accountability.

I. THE JUDICIAL MASSACRES OF 1969 AND 2016

The first Massacre of Judges occurred during the presidency of Gamal Abdel Nasser.⁵² Nasser's policy solicited inappropriate interference in judicial affairs.⁵³ Between 1964 and 1969, Nasser enticed judges to join the Arab Socialist Union.⁵⁴ His successive attempts failed when judges turned down his offer.⁵⁵ The judges insisted that joining the Union would affect their independence and impartiality.⁵⁶ In response to their refusal, Nasser established a group of loyal judges to eavesdrop on their colleagues.⁵⁷ This group of loyal judges formed a secret organization known as "Tanziem Sarie al-Tali'i" (Tanziem).⁵⁸ Membership of Tanziem consisted of several judges who held leading positions in the MoJ and the

PPO.⁵⁹ As a result, this caused a growing sense of outrage among judges and prosecutors.⁶⁰

The Judges' Club (Club) provided an arena in which to condemn the government's solicitation of judges to join the Socialist Union, and also provided a social venue for judges and prosecutors.⁶¹ Nasser's regime was unable to impose its rule over the Club. Nasser regarded the Club as the face of opposition and a threat, especially when Tanziem failed to secure any seats on the Club board.⁶² Repeated failure led to more antagonism against the judiciary.⁶³ Nasser took two steps to put an end to the resistance from the judiciary.⁶⁴ First, he issued a law that dissolved the Club board.⁶⁵ He appointed all the members of the Club's board, instead of elected members.⁶⁶ Second, he issued Law Number 83 of 1969, dissolving all judicial bodies and reserving for himself the right to reappoint all judges.⁶⁷ In this reappointment process, he excluded at least 200 judges whom he considered a threat.⁶⁸ The consequences of this law were not addressed until the al-Sadat era in 1972.⁶⁹

The Court of Cassation determined that Nasser's law violated both the Constitution and the Judicial Authority Law (JAL).⁷⁰ The inability of the SJC to face the interference of the executive in the judiciary leads to the establishment of informal organizations among judges.⁷¹ The role of these organizations is to unify the judges against the executive and its allied Tanziem judges.⁷² These organizations are the Independent Judicial Movement, Qoda' al-Istqlal (IJM), and the Judges for Egypt, known as Qoda' men-ajl-Misr (JFE).⁷³

The first informal organization is the IJM, which was established after the judicial massacre in 1969.⁷⁴ From 1970 to 2010, many judges formed the IJM.⁷⁵ They organized secret meetings to support judicial reform.⁷⁶ The leading figures of this movement were Judge Hossam Gheriani,⁷⁷ Ahmed Mekki,⁷⁸ and Hisham Genenia.⁷⁹ They were, however, unable to enforce any judicial reform, and the government blacklisted them.⁸⁰ After the January 25th Revolution, Gheriani, Mekki, and Genenia were appointed to high-ranking judicial and political positions.⁸¹

The second informal organization is the JFE, which suffered the second Massacre of Judges.⁸² This organization was established after the January 25th Revolution.⁸³ There are allegations that the JFE is connected to the Muslim Brotherhood (MB).⁸⁴ Waled Sharabi, one of the JFE leaders, was photographed leaving the MB headquarters.⁸⁵ After ousting ex-President Mohamed Morsi, Waled Sharabi was impeached.⁸⁶ JFE also made several statements,⁸⁷ including their famous position after the military coup when they signed a document condemning it.⁸⁸ They also publicized the document in Rabaa al-Adawiya Square, the center of the sit-in of the MB following the coup.⁸⁹

The MoJ started pursuing JFE members for violating the JAL in relation to political participation—while leaving alone the judges who supported the Coup.⁹⁰ The document that JFE members signed empathizing with MB members was considered proof of political participation.⁹¹ Their act was therefore a violation of the judicial law.⁹² Resultantly, there is still an ongoing Second Massacre of Judges not yet fully completed.⁹³ This has led to the urgent need to tackle the outstanding issue of judicial accountability in contemporary Egypt.

II. ARBITRARINESS AND VAGUENESS OF JUDICIAL ACCOUNTABILITY RULES IN EGYPT

A. Judicial Accountability of Individual Judges

1. Judicial Conduct

Egypt's Constitution grants an exclusive right to the judiciary to settle disputes related to its members.⁹⁴ However, the Constitution lacks a clear prohibition against the MoJ or its delegates interfering in the judicial accountability process.⁹⁵ Unlike the Constitution, the JAL mentions four types of conduct that judges and the judiciary are banned from exercising: political, criminal, disciplinary, and civil.⁹⁶

First, political accountability is the most controversial ban. The JAL does not specify any sanction for the violation of political participation. Political accountability is furthermore the only form of accountability that addresses both judges and the judiciary.⁹⁷ The collective responsibility of the judiciary is not a common issue, except when it comes to political responsibility. As a result, political accountability raises several questions related to the definition of political participation that judges and the judiciary are banned from engaging in.⁹⁸

95. The role of the MoJ over the Ordinary Courts and PPO has passed over two stages. In the first stage (until 2006), the MoJ had full supervision power over the courts. Before its amendment, Law No. 46 (Judicial Authority Law) stated “the MoJ has full authority to supervise all courts and judges. The Chairperson of the court, and the Public Assembly for each court have the right to supervise judges in their respective courts.” Law No. 46 of 1972 (Judicial Authority Law), al-Jarīdah al-Rasmīyah, 5 Oct. 1972, art. 93 (Egypt). In the second stage, this article was amended in 2006. The new amendment states “the Ministry of Justice has the right to administrative supervision over courts. The Chairperson of the court and the Public Assembly for each court, have the right to supervise judges in their respective courts.” Law No. 46 of 1972 (Judicial Authority Law), al-Jarīdah al-Rasmīyah, 5 Oct. 1972, 2006 amendment, art. 93 (Egypt).

Second, criminal accountability is organized contrary to the judicial immunity of prosecutors and judges, which includes investigative or criminal actions taken against them.⁹⁹ Members of the judiciary, including PPO members, are not subject to arrest, search, or seizure.¹⁰⁰ This ban also includes all forms of investigation, both felony and misdemeanor.¹⁰¹ There are two exceptions to this rule.¹⁰² First, both the JID and the SJC permit criminal procedures against a judge or prosecutor.¹⁰³ The SJC has to issue an arrest warrant or authorize the process of investigation, such as search and seizure.¹⁰⁴ Second, if a judge or prosecutor is caught engaging in illegal conduct, a judicial investigator or police officer can arrest the judge or prosecutor.¹⁰⁵ In this case, the Attorney General must notify the SJC of the issue within twenty-four hours, and the SJC then decides whether to arrest the judge or release him on bail.¹⁰⁶ This form of criminal accountability in the JAL leads to social and legal inequality for several reasons.

97. Id. art. 73 (“Courts are prohibited from giving political opinion. Judges are also prohibited from political participation. They cannot run for the election of public assembly, regional institutions or political organization, unless they have submitted their resignation”)

98. Before 2000, the interpretation of Article 88 of the 1971 Constitution maintained partial judicial supervision of elections. Al Hajjaji, supra note 90, at 377. On July 8, 2000, the Supreme Constitutional Court (SCC) overruled the governmental interpretation of Article 88. This judgment was called “a judge for every election box” (Qadi le-kol Sandowq). Id. at 381. It stated that Article 88 indicated full judicial supervision over elections for both general committees and sub-committees. The court concluded it was only permissible to appoint the chief of the election sub-committees from the judiciary. al-Mahkamah al-Dusturiyah al-Ulya [Supreme Constitutional Court] case no. 11, session of 8 July 2000, year 12 (Egypt). Moreover, judges were unable to stop election fraud from occurring during Mubarak’s regime. Al Hajjaji, supra note 90, at 381–82. Before 2000, the regime committed election fraud to sustain its political legitimacy. It used to perform election fraud under mock judicial supervision. Such supervision was limited to the general electoral committee. After 2000, the regime committed blatant fraud during the parliamentary election, despite it being under full judicial supervision. Hence, it led the judiciary to be involved in the political arena. First, a judge who commits a crime is prosecuted and put on trial by his or her colleagues.¹⁰⁷ In the United States, Congress is responsible for the impeachment process of federal judges.¹⁰⁸ In Germany, the Bundestag, with a two-thirds majority, has the right to impeach a judge who violates the constitution in either official or unofficial capacity.¹⁰⁹ However, judges in Egypt are the competent authority that impeach other judges.¹¹⁰ The Minister of Justice is a former judge,¹¹¹ the members of the JID are judges and prosecutors on secondment,¹¹² and the SJC is formulated from senior judges.¹¹³ The impeachment authority of judges allows them to turn a blind eye on investigating certain crimes against senior judges.¹¹⁴ Hence, there is an assumption of nepotism when judges impeach their colleagues.

Second, the special judicial committee is made up of senior judges.¹¹⁵ This committee will convene only for serious crimes, such as murder, while less serious crimes are given less priority by the committee.¹¹⁶ This understanding leads the prosecution, for instance, to refrain from prosecuting judges for traffic law violations.¹¹⁷ As a result, there is a growing consensus among the public that judges are above the law.

117. As part of the criminal immunity and accountability rules, judges and prosecutors are kept in separate detention facilities. They are not to be jailed in the public facilities with other detainees. The reason for such separation is based on the protection of judges and prosecutors from being detained with citizens they have brought to justice in earlier cases. This protection extends from the period of remand "pretrial detention" until the final judgment and imprisonment. Law No. 46 of 1972 (Judicial Authority Law), al-Jarīdah al-Rasmīyah, 5 Oct. 1972, art. 96/4 (Egypt).

Third, disciplinary accountability is yet another vague form of accountability after political accountability. The JAL also uses vague terms regarding disciplinary accountability. These terms include commercial work, work ethics, and integrity, among others.¹¹⁸ Judges must fulfill their obligations and comply with professional ethics.¹¹⁹ The JAL gives the President of the Court the right to respond to such violations committed by judges.¹²⁰ Additionally, judges are banned from engaging in any commercial activities.¹²¹ However, the limits of commercial transactions are not clearly delineated in the JAL.¹²² The JID does not demarcate what is considered commercial activity, and what is not, with a few exceptions. As a result, disciplinary accountability terms are vague and open the door to arbitrary proceedings.

Fourth, there are two types of civil accountability. The first type of civil accountability is related to the judicial work of both judges and prosecutors.¹²³ The general rule for this type of civil accountability is that judges are immune while their accountability is an exception, as will be discussed in the following paragraphs.¹²⁴ The Civil Procedure Law (CPL) grants judges and prosecutors legal immunity from any civil damages that may arise from their work.¹²⁵ Article 494 lists two exceptions to this rule.¹²⁶ First, judges and prosecutors are not immune from legal actions if they commit fraud, a hoax, treachery, or serious professional misconduct.¹²⁷ Second, judges are not immune from civil liability, which occurs when a judge refuses to hear cases.¹²⁸

The second type of civil accountability applies to nonjudicial actions. In theory, judges should not derive any form of civil immunity from their

118. These types of vague terms are used to impeach noncompliant judges, like in the 1969 and 2016 judge massacres. nonjudicial work.¹²⁹ The CPL does not regulate such civil liability of judges and prosecutors.¹³⁰ Despite this, judges and prosecutors enjoy comprehensive immunity for their nonjudicial actions.¹³¹ The JID has developed certain practices for nonjudicial civil liability.¹³² This policy occupies a middle ground between criminal and disciplinary accountability, but judges enjoy nonjudicial civil immunity.¹³³ On the one hand, the JID must express its consent for civil procedures to be launched against the nonjudicial civil actions of judges.¹³⁴ On the other hand, the JID cannot take any civil action against a judge.¹³⁵ If the JID believes that there is nonjudicial civil liability, it will transfer the case to the competent civil court.¹³⁶ The court will then hear from all the parties, including the judge.¹³⁷ In other cases, if the JID cannot find any cause for taking nonjudicial civil action, the JID will not transfer the case to the competent civil court.¹³⁸ As a result, the plaintiff in the nonjudicial civil case will not have his or her case heard.

Nonjudicial civil liability jeopardizes trust in the judiciary in general and in judges specifically. Judges shall not enjoy any civil privilege from their personal behavior.¹³⁹ It is legally unacceptable to add an extra judicial barrier with the aim of protecting certain classes in society. If a plaintiff claims that a judge has refrained from paying rent, the plaintiff must first resort to the JID to obtain its approval to sue the judge. The JID has thus imposed an extrajudicial procedure on such plaintiffs.¹⁴⁰ Neither the CPL nor the JAL regulates nonjudicial civil liability. The practice of the JID, however, has helped to develop a form of immunity for judges. As a result, it must be reformed to abolish nonjudicial civil immunity.

2. Procedures

a. Political Accountability Procedures

Accountability procedures differ according to the nature of the judicial violation: political, criminal, disciplinary, or civil. For political accountability procedures, Article 73 of the JAL identifies two forms of political participation by judges.¹⁴¹ First, judges are banned from participating in politics.¹⁴² Political participation is not identified by the JAL in detail, particularly with regard to related procedures and consequences for violators.¹⁴³ However, the JID considers political accountability to be part of disciplinary accountability for the procedures; it applies the same rules to the disciplinary accountability procedures.¹⁴⁴ Second, judges may not run for any parliamentary elections of regional or political organizations unless they resign from their position.¹⁴⁵ Article 73 of the JAL regulates the procedures and rights of judges and prosecutors who resign to run for parliamentary elections.¹⁴⁶ Therefore, a legislative gap exists regarding the procedures for political accountability of judges and prosecutors because the procedures and consequences for a judge or prosecutor who participates in politics are not clearly identified or defined in the JAL.

b. Disciplinary Accountability Procedures

For disciplinary accountability procedures, the chairperson of the primary court is the competent authority to initiate disciplinary actions against judges, while the district attorney of the PPO is the competent authority for prosecutors.¹⁴⁷ There are several levels in disciplinary accountability procedures, starting with a verbal warning to the violator (judge or prosecutor), which can then escalate to a written notice if the violation is more serious or frequent.¹⁴⁸

In a first-instance violation, the chairperson of the primary court or the district attorney issues a verbal notice or private admonition to the violator.¹⁴⁹ They are entitled to issue such a notice if the judge or the prosecutor “violate[d] their job obligations, or requirements of their job.”¹⁵⁰ However, the law’s definitions of job obligations and job requirements are not clear.¹⁵¹ Because a major challenge arising from verbal notice is that it opens the door to arbitrary decisions, clear definitions of these terms are needed.

In a second-instance violation, if the verbal notice proved insufficient, the violator receives a written notice.¹⁵² If the district attorney or the chairperson believes that the violator was not deterred by the warnings, they raise the issue in a complaint addressed to the JID at the MoJ.¹⁵³ Otherwise, the JID calls on the violator, whether a judge or prosecutor, to go to the JID headquarters for further investigation.¹⁵⁴ Investigations are handled by judicial inspectors of a rank higher than the rank of the judge or the prosecutor.¹⁵⁵

The JID is the competent authority that holds judges’ records and files as a reference for their promotion or transfer.¹⁵⁶ It is also the competent authority for investigating all disciplinary actions, except for verbal notices.¹⁵⁷ The disciplinary commission may not take any punitive action unless the disciplinary procedures were initiated by the JID.¹⁵⁸ The Minister of Justice nominates all the judges who work in the JID to look into violations committed by other judges.¹⁵⁹ Any nominated judge must be of a rank that is either equal or senior to the violating judge.¹⁶⁰ If the violator is a judge at the Court of Appeal or at the Court of Cassation, the nominated judge must hold the rank of vice president of the Court of Cassation or president at the Court of Appeal.¹⁶¹ If the violator is a member of the primary court, the investigator shall be a judge at the Court of Appeal or the Court of Cassation.¹⁶²

Written notice is considered a harsher form of warning for three reasons. First, while verbal notice does not affect the professional development of a judge or prosecutor, a written notice is a blemish on the judge's competency.¹⁶³ Second, a written notice is documented in the file of the judge or the prosecutor until his or her retirement, while a verbal notice is not mentioned in any record.¹⁶⁴ Third, the Minister of Justice or the Deputy Attorney General issues a written notice, while only the chairperson of the court or the district attorney gives a verbal notice.¹⁶⁵

If the violator continues to commit a further infringement after receiving written notice, the JID will proceed with a disciplinary case in front of the Disciplinary Commission.¹⁶⁶ The procedures are the same as the procedures for verbal and written notices.¹⁶⁷ The chairperson of the primary court or the district attorney will notify the violator of his or her violation, and the violator will present his or her case.¹⁶⁸ The JID then transfers the case to the Disciplinary Commission.¹⁶⁹

The aim of the Disciplinary Commission is to impeach the violator.¹⁷⁰ The Commission consists of the three most senior justices of the Court of Appeal, the two most senior vice presidents of the Court of Cassation, and the two most senior justices of the Court of Appeal.¹⁷¹ This configuration depends mainly on the seniority of the judges of both the Court of Appeal and the Court of Cassation.¹⁷² In the event that a senior-ranking judge has an issue attending the Commission, he is replaced by the next in command.¹⁷³ Thus, if the second most senior vice president in the Court of Cassation is unable to attend, he is replaced by the third most senior vice president of the Court of Cassation.¹⁷⁴

The proceedings of the Disciplinary Commission are the same as that of a trial process.¹⁷⁵ While the defendant presents his defense, the Attorney General presents the people's claim against the judge.¹⁷⁶ Each party presents its case to the Commission.¹⁷⁷ During the trial, the judge has the right to have a public defender, as well as a judge willing to represent him at the trial.¹⁷⁸ Unlike the general rule of public trials, proceedings of the trial are closed, while the session announcing the final verdict is public.¹⁷⁹

c. Criminal Accountability Procedures

The JAL includes rules on two types of criminal accountability procedures. The first is Flagrante Delicto.¹⁸⁰ This happens when the judge or the prosecutor is caught in the act of committing the misdemeanor.¹⁸¹ This is mentioned in the same section as judicial immunity.¹⁸² Judges and prosecutors cannot be arrested unless they are caught while committing the crime.¹⁸³ The Commission determines whether the judge or prosecutor should be kept in custody or released with or without bail.¹⁸⁴ Additionally, the Commission must hear the defendant upon request by the defense council.¹⁸⁵

The second type of procedure takes place when there is “irrefutable and conclusive evidence” of the misdemeanor.¹⁸⁶ This type of procedure combines both criminal and disciplinary procedures.¹⁸⁷ For the criminal procedures, the Commission suspends the violator from continuing to exercise his judicial duties until the criminal court issues its final judgment.¹⁸⁸ It is worth noting that criminal procedures against the violator do not necessarily lead to impeachment.¹⁸⁹ The disciplinary procedures are a separate process, unrelated to criminal procedures.¹⁹⁰ Once the criminal procedures have concluded, the Commission begins its impeachment proceedings.¹⁹¹ Further, the acquittal does not imply exemption from disciplinary procedures.¹⁹² The Disciplinary Commission will still have to decide on the impeachment, forced resignation, or acquittal of the judge or prosecutor.¹⁹³

d. Civil Accountability Procedures

The JAL does not regulate civil accountability procedures. These procedures have, however, been developed by the JID.¹⁹⁴ The JID's policy of civil accountability occupies a middle ground between the criminal accountability procedures and the disciplinary accountability procedures.¹⁹⁵ The JID adds one requirement, namely the acceptance of the JID to proceed with the accountability procedures against the violator.¹⁹⁶ The JID has to decide either to proceed with the civil case or to dismiss it. In the first case, the plaintiff can resort to the court of law to present his or her case against the violator.¹⁹⁷ In the second case, the court will not hear the case.¹⁹⁸ The plaintiff cannot proceed to the court of law without the permission of the JID because the court will refuse to hear the case on the grounds of judicial immunity.¹⁹⁹ In both cases, the JID cannot impeach or force the violator to resign.²⁰⁰ As a result, nonjudicial civil liability adds a procedural burden to litigation against judges.

3. Disciplinary Actions

The JAL does not impose specific sanctions for political, criminal, or civil accountability. This has resulted in two issues. First, it has forced the JID and the SJC to use disciplinary sanctions as an alternative option. The JID and the SJC have established their right to determine suitable disciplinary sanctions for political, criminal, or civil violations.²⁰¹ Second, the JID and the SJC have developed policies regarding political, criminal, and civil accountability that are not reflected in the JAL. The process of forced resignation is an example of such a policy: violators are forced to resign before initial criminal or disciplinary procedures even commence.²⁰²

The JAL differentiates between disciplinary sanctions and reasons for ending disciplinary procedures. Both of these are forms of disciplinary sanctions. Nonetheless, there are three differences between the two types.

194. Id. art. 96/3 (stating that “[i]t is not permissible to make any investigation or prosecution against any judge, unless there is permission from said committee and upon the request of the attorney general.”). First, disciplinary sanctions are imposed solely by the SJC.²⁰³ The violator, however, may decide to end disciplinary procedures at any stage through voluntary retirement or resignation.²⁰⁴ Second, disciplinary sanctions result in supplementary sanctions, such as not being granted a retirement salary.²⁰⁵ On the other hand, ending disciplinary procedures aims to provide the judge or the prosecutor with an opportunity to avoid supplementary sanctions.²⁰⁶ The violator can still have his or her end-of-service financial rewards and salaries.²⁰⁷ Third, disciplinary sanctions can result in exclusion from the Bar and the practice of law for impeached judges.²⁰⁸ The violator can resort to terminating the disciplinary procedures in order to join the Bar.²⁰⁹ The Bar Association denies its membership to impeached judges.²¹⁰ Hence, judges under disciplinary procedures prefer to resort to end disciplinary procedures.

First, disciplinary sanctions involve impeachment or reprimand and admonition.²¹¹ In terms of impeachment, the JAL considers this as either recidivist or harsh punishment.²¹² In recidivist cases, the violator already has a record of disciplinary reprimand or admonition. The Disciplinary Commission uses this record as a basis for impeachment.²¹³ As for using impeachment as a harsh punishment, the Commission uses impeachment directly, even if the violator lacks a track record of disciplinary sanctions.²¹⁴ The Minister of Justice must transfer the impeachment decision to the President of the Republic.²¹⁵ The President then delivers the impeachment in the form of a presidential decree.²¹⁶ Finally, the Commission Committee can decide whether to transfer the violator to nonjudicial work.²¹⁷

In terms of reprimand and admonition, the JAL does not identify specific violations for which a primary court chairperson or the JID issues a reprimand or an admonition.²¹⁸ The JID and the Committee have discretion to determine what sanction is appropriate based on the violator's behavior.²¹⁹ This practice facilitates impartiality and arbitrariness. The chairperson of the primary court can issue a notice of violation against certain members, while refraining from doing so against those who align with the government.²²⁰

Second, reasons for terminating disciplinary procedures are the resignation or retirement of the judge or the prosecutor. These reasons are an alternative to the disciplinary sanctions. This bargaining sanction is mentioned in Article 104 of the JAL.²²¹ In the case of retirement, it terminates the work contract, thereby also leading to the termination of the disciplinary procedures.²²² A violator who has reached the age of seventy is immune from any disciplinary sanctions.²²³ Resignation is an option for two reasons. First, judges usually resort to resignation rather than facing impeachment, for fear of shame within the judicial community.²²⁴ Second, one of the consequences of impeachment procedures is the suspension of a pension.²²⁵ For this reason, if the JID finds strong incriminating evidence against a judge, it offers him the option of resigning (rather than facing impeachment) so that he can benefit from his pension plan.²²⁶

B. Accountability of the Judiciary

The JAL does not recognize the collective responsibility of the judiciary as an institution, except in the case of political participation. Article 73/2 bans courts from declaring their political opinion.²²⁷ The demand for judicial accountability is a sacrosanct issue in the Egyptian judiciary. This is due to four reasons.

227. This ban was mentioned in the 1943 JAL and has become a common article in successive JALs. Id. art. 73/2.

First, the Egyptian judiciary propagates itself as a protector of rights.²²⁸ A journalist or writer who meddles in judicial matters or comments on judgments,²²⁹ however, is subject to criminal prosecution for interfering in judicial matters or for insulting the judiciary.²³⁰ Furthermore, political participation of the judiciary in past years, specifically the 2005 and 2012 elections, has raised the question of public trust in the judiciary as an institution.²³¹ Many judges have made statements against the Muslim Brotherhood (MB) regime, the Mubarak regime, or the 2013 Coup by handing down harsh sentences for nonlethal protests.²³² The issue became more complicated after the establishment of special courts to place members of the MB on trial.²³³ This occurred after several judges refused to preside in trials against members of the MB.²³⁴

Second, the current rule of the Minister of Justice is ambivalent.²³⁵ The successive Ministers of Justice are former senior judges.²³⁶ Even though they are members of the Cabinet, they still use their former status.²³⁷ All the senior public officials working in the MoJ are judges, who are on secondment from the judiciary.²³⁸ Moreover, before the JAL amendment in 2006, the Minister of Justice had the ultimate right to supervise judges and courts.²³⁹ In 2006, the new JAL amendment limited this right to only the administrative supervision of the courts, which is limited only to court employees.²⁴⁰ Currently, the real effective authority of the MoJ is its authority over the JID.²⁴¹ As a result, a redefinition of the authority of the Minister of Justice, the MoJ, and the SJC should have been addressed before transferring the authority of the MoJ to the SJC.

Third, the clear lack of a checks and balances system between the judiciary and the other authorities raises the question of to whom the judiciary is accountable.²⁴² Egypt's Constitution makes the judiciary accountable to itself.²⁴³ This raises the question of how to make the judiciary accountable to more than just itself, like in the US.²⁴⁴ The JAL ensures that the JID is under the full supervision of the MoJ.²⁴⁵ However, current proposals lean toward transferring the MoJ's authority to the SJC.²⁴⁶ On the one hand, this proposal is based on the fact the MoJ has a history of misusing the accountability procedures.²⁴⁷ On the other hand, this proposal would give accountability authority to an unaccountable authority—the SJC.²⁴⁸ As a result, this would lead to a situation where “absolute power corrupts absolutely.”²⁴⁹

Fourth, the Attorney General and the PPO were members of the executive and judicial authorities until 2006.²⁵⁰ They used to be under the direct supervision of the Minister of Justice.²⁵¹ In 2006, that article was amended to limit the supervision over the PPO to the Attorney General.²⁵² In 2014, the Constitution made both the Attorney General and the PPO members of the judiciary only.²⁵³ In addition, the Constitution eliminated the authority of the President to appoint the Attorney General.²⁵⁴ Currently, the SJC has the sole discretion to appoint the Attorney General.²⁵⁵ Hence, the pure judicial nature of the Attorney General illustrates the lack of a checks and balances system between the judiciary, the legislative, and the executive authorities.

III. THE CURRENT CHALLENGES REGARDING JUDICIAL ACCOUNTABILITY IN EGYPT

A. Accountability of Judges

1. The New Policy of Forced Resignation of Judges

Recently, the Minister of Justice, the Attorney General, the President of the SJC, and the President of the State Council have exhibited new legal behavior against judges who have committed serious offenses, such as bribery or getting involved with drugs. This behavior aims to protect the image of the judiciary. It involves requesting that the judge resign before the start of any criminal or disciplinary procedures.²⁵⁶ This is not yet a judicial policy. The JID does not publish the disciplinary procedures against judges or prosecutors, as highlighted in two recent major cases.

In the first case, a judge was caught smuggling 68 kilograms of cannabis in November 2016.²⁵⁷ The judge used his judicial immunity to pass through security checks at the tunnel connecting Cairo to the Sinai Peninsula.²⁵⁸ While the judge's car was passing through, a police dog barked at it.²⁵⁹ This led police officers to search the car.²⁶⁰ The judge was arrested, and the Minister of Justice requested that he resign from his position.²⁶¹ Hence, this resignation deprived the judge of all his legal immunity.²⁶²

In the second case, the Secretary General of the State Council was charged as an accomplice in a bribery case involving 150 million Egyptian Pounds in December 2016.²⁶³ The case was publicized when the head of the procurement department of the State Council was caught taking a bribe.²⁶⁴ The Administrative Control Authority (ACA) taped the bribery, upon which the employee (the head of the procurement department) agreed to cooperate with the investigation authority.²⁶⁵ He directed them to the Secretary General of the State Council, who had supported all bribery transactions.²⁶⁶ The ACA presented the information to the Attorney General, who went to meet with the President of the State Council.²⁶⁷ After a long discussion, they requested that the Secretary General resign.²⁶⁸ The Secretary General was later arrested and brought to the ACA headquarters.²⁶⁹ After a long day of investigation, he was detained in solitary confinement.²⁷⁰ When they went to conclude the investigation the next day, they found that he had committed suicide.²⁷¹

Cleansing the judiciary of corrupt members is not a good enough reason to violate the law. The Minister of Justice, the Attorney General, the President of the SJC, and the President of the State Council clearly violated these judges' rights. The seriousness of the two crimes (drug smuggling and bribery) does not justify violating the JAL procedures. In these two incidents, both judges were asked to resign.²⁷² These requests violated JAL mandates.²⁷³ Specifically, requesting a judge to resign before the start of any criminal procedures or disciplinary procedures violates the rights stipulated in the Constitution.²⁷⁴ The Minister of Justice, the Attorney General, the SJC, and the State Council illegally forced the two judges to resign.²⁷⁵ Such action from them would go without holding them accountable. As a result, this raises the question of the institution's accountability regarding the head of the judicial institution.

2. Political Participation

There must be a clear definition of political participation and the ban against judges becoming involved in politics. Judges in the United States are able to express their political opinion.²⁷⁶ Freedom of expression is not only reflected in their personal lives, but also in their judgments.²⁷⁷ Judges are accountable to the people on both a professional and a personal level.²⁷⁸ While the definition of judicial accountability is not clear, it is always connected to either a judicial decision or judicial performance in general.²⁷⁹

In Egypt, Professor Rifaat Fodah argues that every division of the state has the right to express its political views.²⁸⁰ The only exception to this rule is the judicial authority.²⁸¹ Article 73 of the JAL prohibits courts and judges from any form of political participation.²⁸² Supporting political parties jeopardizes judicial neutrality.²⁸³ Thus, the ban aims to sustain the neutrality of the judiciary in political disputes.

The JID distinguishes between two types of political participation. While the JID denounces political participation by left-wing judges, it leaves political participation by right-wing judges unpunished.²⁸⁴ This political discrepancy started after the 2013 Coup.²⁸⁵ During 2012 and 2013, judges were divided into three main parties.²⁸⁶ The first was the neutral party.²⁸⁷ They did not adopt any political position during the political turmoil following the success of the MB presidential candidate.²⁸⁸ This group was the smallest group in the judiciary at that time.²⁸⁹

The second party opposed the MB in various political statements in a way that benefitted Mubarak's regime.²⁹⁰ These official statements and press conferences were published in the public media, denouncing the MB and their politics.²⁹¹ The leader of this faction was Judge Al-Zend, who was the President of the Judges' Club and later became the Minister of Justice.²⁹² The major position of this group came after the promulgation of the 2012 Constitutional Declaration.²⁹³ The Declaration instigated three major points of contention by these judges.²⁹⁴ First, the Declaration reopened the investigation and prosecutions in acts committed against the revolutionaries.²⁹⁵ Second, the Declaration offered legal immunity from Raba'a Al-Adawiya Square, the center of the MB sit-in following the Coup.³⁰⁵ Currently, the JID and the SJC have issued disciplinary procedures as well as impeachment proceedings against several of the judges of Raba'a.³⁰⁶ The JID and the SJC believe that the judges of Raba'a have clearly violated Article 73 regarding the ban against political participation.³⁰⁷ On the other hand, even though Al-Zend's judges also participated in politics during this time, the JID and the SJC have left them unpunished.³⁰⁸ The JID and the SJC view Al-Zend's judges as protecting judicial independence from the brutal aggression of the executive.³⁰⁹ Hence, they do not consider their participation in politics a violation of Article 73.

3. Lack of Transparency

The judiciary often withholds necessary information concerning judicial administration from the public. Each circuit and prosecution district office issues its own statistics.³¹⁰ This data is sent monthly to the MoJ and the Attorney General.³¹¹ None of this data is made available to the public.³¹² There is no public institution within the judiciary that releases judicial data in reference to the number or types of cases.³¹³ This is a violation of Article 68/1 of the Constitution, which regulates access to information and official documents.³¹⁴

The lack of transparency within the judiciary takes on three forms. First, the Attorney General has the ultimate authority to ban media coverage in certain cases to protect the confidentiality of those involved.³¹⁵ Between 2013 and 2015, the Attorney General banned the publication of

314. CONSTITUTION OF THE ARAB REPUBLIC OF EGYPT, 18 Jan. 2014, art. 68/1. ("Information, data, statistics and official documents are owned by the people. fifteen cases, all related to police or judicial violations.³¹⁶ This right is criticized, given that the Attorney General is empowered with an authority that is undisputed and unverified by any national independent bodies.³¹⁷

Second, judges and prosecutors prepare statistics related to their districts, which are subsequently sent to both the MoJ and the Attorney General.³¹⁸ They believe that the publication of such data leads to interference with the administration of justice, which is mainly the responsibility of the MoJ.³¹⁹ Third, neither the judiciary nor the PPO appoints a public speaker to address the public with judicial and public concerns.³²⁰ The judiciary believes it is the legal elite³²¹ and disregards public demands for information.³²² As a result, it is rare to come across public statements regarding popular cases from either the judiciary or the PPO.³²³

There are two reasons for this lack of transparency in the judiciary: a lack of legal responsibility and a lack of political responsibility. In terms of legal responsibility, even though there is a constitutional mandate to ensure the transparency of state agencies, the JAL and the judicial practice take a stand against this right.³²⁴ On the one hand, the Constitution stipulates that there should be a forum in which citizens can file complaints regarding access to public data being withheld.³²⁵ It also maintains that responsibility must be taken in cases of nonconformity.³²⁶ On the other hand, the JAL protects the judicial administration from any redress sought by the public.³²⁷ Members of the public cannot force the judiciary to disclose such data. Article 84 of the JAL limits the right to complain against judicial administrative decisions, including the request to disclose judicial data to judges and prosecutors.³²⁸ The Judges' Circuit at the Cairo Court of Appeal, which is responsible for all cases relating to the annulment of judicial administrative decisions, will not hear any cases related to a constitutional mandate unless the plaintiff is a judge or prosecutor.³²⁹ Members of the public are not able to seek legal redress before the Judges' Circuit, even if they have been harmed by the judicial administrative decision.³³⁰ Consequently, the current formulation of the JAL constitutes an obstacle to enforcing the constitutional right, resulting in its inapplicability.

In terms of political responsibility, no responsibility falls to either the judiciary or the Attorney General when it comes to publishing judicial data.³³¹ This is due to two reasons. First, there is no consultation of the public in the appointment process of the SJC, the Minister of Justice, or the Attorney General.³³² As far as the SJC is concerned, all of its seven members are appointed based on the principle of seniority.³³³ Second, there is an issue of sensitivity among the executives in dealing with the SJC, the Minister of Justice, and the Attorney General. While the MoJ is a member of the Cabinet, the Prime Minister cannot request that data be made available to the public.³³⁴ This is because the Cabinet fears executive interference in judicial affairs.³³⁵ As a result, both legal and political responsibilities of the judiciary must be established. The JAL can work on establishing the legal responsibility of the judiciary. The political responsibility is part of judicial legitimacy, which also needs to be addressed.

4. Current Endeavors to Transfer the JID to the SJC

One of the major requests of judges is to transfer the JID from the MoJ to the SJC. The JID is a subdivision of the MoJ and a strong tool in controlling the judiciary. Before 2006, the Minister of Justice was the only competent authority that nominated the JID chairperson, who also works as a Deputy to the Minister of Justice.³³⁶ In 2006, a new amendment was introduced requiring SJC acceptance of the proposed JID chairperson candidate.³³⁷ This amendment was a great disappointment to judges, as they sought a full transfer of the JID from the Minister of Justice to the SJC.³³⁸ This is why the new amendment is not considered a real reform.

Transferring the JID to the SJC failed after the 2011 Revolution.³³⁹ In 2012, the Minister of Justice, Judge Ahmed Mikky, sent a formal letter to the SJC requesting a factual transfer of the JID.³⁴⁰ He intended for this

340. The letter states the following:

The Chief Justice of the Court of Cassation and the Chairman of the SJC Since I have the honor to be a member of the Judiciary, I shared with my colleagues the utmost necessity factual transfer to potentially lead to the legal transfer of the JID to the SJC.³⁴¹ This incident was the only significant attempt at transferring the JID from the MoJ to the SJC.³⁴² Judge Mikky's request, however, was denied.³⁴³ The SJC claimed that such a transfer required a legislative amendment to the JAL, instead of a ministerial decision.³⁴⁴ This was a golden opportunity for the judiciary to carry out a factual transfer of the JID. Most of the judges felt betrayed by the SJC.³⁴⁵ It was very difficult at that time to amend the JAL due to existing political hurdles. As a consequence, there was a predominant feeling of fear among judges that the SJC would become another arm of the executive.³⁴⁶

Egypt's Constitution has led to increasing judicial instability. Any proposal for judicial reform has been suspended during the period of President Al-Sisi.³⁴⁷ The status quo is considered the best position for any regime to maintain strong influence over judicial decisions, while giving more authority over the judiciary to the MoJ.³⁴⁸ With a clear lack of separation of powers in contemporary Egypt, it is hard to say there is an impartial and independent mechanism that ensures judicial accountability.

B. Accountability of the Judicial Institute

1. Accountability of the Minister of Justice

The ambivalence regarding the position of the Minister of Justice—in other words, whether it is a purely executive authority or somewhere between the executive and the judiciary—has given rise to the term to transfer JID from the Ministry of Justice to the SJC As per our last meeting, I heard that you would nominate Judge Zaghloul al-Balushi to be the new chairperson of the JID. I have not only agreed with your nomination, but also starting today I would like to inform you the transfer of the JID to the SJC is now in effect. I wish also to ask your acceptance of his nomination to be Assistant to the MoJ until the promulgation of a new law, which would attach the JID to your Council. Please accept my sincere regards to the SJC, the new chairperson of the JID, and all our colleagues.

“sovereign ministry.”³⁴⁹ This term does not have a specific legal definition. Rather, it denotes the practice followed before the formulation of the 2014 Constitution.³⁵⁰ The President of the Republic has the right to appoint ministers for “sovereign ministries” upon consultation with the Prime Minister.³⁵¹ Moreover, in July 2013, the President of the Republic made an attempt to appoint Judge Mohamed Mahdi, a former judge at the Egyptian State Council and the ICTY, as the Minister of Justice.³⁵² This suggestion was rejected by most of the ordinary court judges.³⁵³ One of the judges said “the club, as well as the judges, will boycott the ministry if Mahdi is chosen to be the Minister of Justice.”³⁵⁴ The president was then forced to appoint him as the Minister of Transitional Justice.³⁵⁵

In May 2015, ex-Minister of Justice, Judge Mahfouz Saber, was asked during a television interview whether “the son of a garbage collector stood any chance of being appointed as a public prosecutor.”³⁵⁶ He replied:

349. The term “sovereign ministry” includes the Ministry of Defense and the Ministry of Interior. The appointment of these ministers is taken directly from the President of the Republic. Article 234 of the 2014 Constitution states “The Minister of Defense is appointed upon the approval of the Supreme Council of the Armed Forces. The provisions of this article shall remain in force for two full presidential terms starting from the date on which this Constitution comes into effect.” CONSTITUTION OF THE ARAB REPUBLIC OF EGYPT, 18 Jan. 2014, art. 234. As a result of this statement, Saber resigned from office a week later.³⁵⁸

In March 2016, the ex-Minister of Justice and ex-president of the Judges' Club, Judge Ahmed Al-Zend, made several controversial statements upon his appointment as the Minister of Justice.³⁵⁹ The two most controversial were about neutralizing MB opponents without a trial and involved insulting the prophet Mohammed. In the first statement, he was answering a question about what he thought of the killing of the terrorists in Sinai without a trial. His response was as follows:

If the armed forces have responded hastily and killed 40 of those terrorist extremists . . . the armed forces will spare no effort in avenging their deaths in a way that will satisfy our fury . . . I believe 400,000 are not enough for our martyrs . . . Personally, the fire in my heart will not die out until at least 10,000 radicals are killed for every martyr[.]³⁶⁰

In the second incident, Al-Zend responded to the question on the imprisonment of journalists who insulted him in their newspapers. He said "if jail was not created for those people, then for whom? . . . I would imprison anyone who violates the law, even if it is the Prophet Mohammed—Peace be upon him."³⁶¹ Al-Zend later voiced his regret at having made such a statement.³⁶² The Prime Minister, however, asked Al-Zend to resign as a result of his controversial statement.³⁶³ Al-Zend refused to comply with the Prime Minister's request.³⁶⁴ He believed that he could

364. It should be noted that the resignation was more politically than religiously motivated. Al-Zend's words about the Prophet Mohamed are not a religious violation. The Sunna does not contradict not be removed from office for this type of verbal mistake.³⁶⁵ The issue was raised with President Al-Sisi, who ordered his removal from the Cabinet.³⁶⁶ Hence, Al Sisi appointed a new Minister of Justice.³⁶⁷

2. Accountability of the SJC

There are three issues closely related to the accountability of the SJC. First, the Constitution and the JAL lack any legal rule regarding SJC accountability.³⁶⁸ It has been argued that members of the SJC hold their position for only one judicial year, starting in October each year.³⁶⁹ However, the continuous attempts from the executive to override the judiciary mandate the existence of a strong SJC.³⁷⁰ This strength would be used to stop such attempts.³⁷¹ The weakness of the SJC's position leads to a stronger role of the Judges' Club as the sponsor of the judiciary against the executive authority, even though the main—and supposedly sole—role of the Club is to offer services to its members.³⁷² As a result, the call for increased authority of the SJC must include concrete accountability rules.

Second, SJC members are elected neither internally (internal judges' elections) nor externally (public elections). They are appointed based on their seniority, except for the position of the Attorney General.³⁷³ The president of the SJC is the most senior member at the Court of Cassation.³⁷⁴ The two other members from the Court of Cassation are the

with such wording. This can be clearly seen in the incident of the woman from Bani Makhzum who committed theft during the prophet's time. When Usama bin Zaid (former adopted child of the prophet and one of his close friends) talked to him about this woman, the prophet said, "Do you try to intercede for somebody in a case connected with Allah's Prescribed Punishments?" Then he got up and delivered a sermon saying, "What destroyed the nations preceding you, was that if a noble amongst them stole, they would forgive him, and if a poor person amongst them stole, they would inflict Allah's Legal punishment on him. second and the third most senior.³⁷⁵ The president of the Cairo Court of Appeal and the two most senior judges at the Court of Appeal are also members.³⁷⁶ Previously, the 1943 Judicial Independence Law (JIL) required at least two elected members in the composition of the SJC.³⁷⁷ The JIL was amended in less than two months after the 1952 Coup.³⁷⁸

Third, SJC members are potential candidates for executive positions after their retirement. The hope of holding a position after retirement prevents members of the SJC from taking any aggressive measures against the executive authority, for fear of being deprived of senior, post-retirement positions. From 2011 to 2016, eight judges have assumed the position of Minister of Justice.³⁷⁹ Six out of the eight ministers were members of the SJC.³⁸⁰ These judges who were members of the SJC and later became the Minister of Justice are:

3. Accountability of the Attorney General

The appointment of the Attorney General has undergone three stages. In the first two stages, the nature of the position of the Attorney General was either executive only,³⁸⁷ or a mixture between judicial and executive powers.³⁸⁸ During these two periods, both the legal and the political accountability of the Attorney General was left to the executive authority to handle. The first stage was from 1972 to 2005.³⁸⁹ The Attorney General was under direct supervision of the Minister of Justice for both judicial and administrative work.³⁹⁰ The second stage occurred after the JAL reform in 2005, when the Attorney General position became independent from the Minister of Justice.³⁹¹ The appointment of the Attorney General was still at the discretion of the President of the Republic.³⁹² In these two stages, any legal or political responsibilities of the Attorney General were

In 2006, the article was amended to replace the “Minister of Justice” with “The Attorney General.” Id. It should be noted that in Egypt, the position of the Attorney General is different than the position of the Minister of Justice. directly referred to the executive, despite the mixed nature of the position.³⁹³

In contrast, the position of the Attorney General in the third stage has raised many questions regarding legal and political accountability.³⁹⁴ The third and current stage started in 2014.³⁹⁵ The 2014 Constitution transferred the appointment authority of the Attorney General from the President of the Republic to the SJC.³⁹⁶ This transfer turned a blind eye to the accountability issue regarding the Attorney General.³⁹⁷ The JAL has not tackled this issue of accountability. Its philosophy is that the Attorney General is a member of the executive authority, or at least enjoys an authority of mixed nature (executive and judicial).³⁹⁸

Any form of legal or political accountability of the Attorney General is not a matter of discussion for several reasons. First, the term of the Attorney General is currently for a limited period.³⁹⁹ Previously, the appointment term of the Attorney General was unlimited, which is based on ex-Attorney General Abdel-Majid Mahmoud, who was appointed from 2006 to 2012.⁴⁰⁰ Currently, the Constitution limits the duration of the Attorney General to only four years.⁴⁰¹ Therefore, the Constitution and the JAL do not address the impeachment process or the replacement of the Attorney General.

Second, the impeachment or removal of the Attorney General is directly connected to the replacement of the ex-Attorney General Abdel-Majid Mahmoud (2006–2012). The impeachment of the Attorney General

394. After the assassination of Attorney General Hesham Barakat in 2015, the appointment of a new Attorney General was put on hold for more than six months. was one of the most pressing issues after the 2011 Revolution.⁴⁰² During the period between 1992 and 2006, Mahmoud was the district attorney of the National Security Prosecution Office.⁴⁰³ In 2006, Mahmoud was appointed as Attorney General by ex-President Mubarak.⁴⁰⁴

After the success of the Revolution in 2011, it was difficult for the MB to keep Mahmoud in his position.⁴⁰⁵ The MB believed that he was a tool of Mubarak's regime and that he himself used to persecute MB members.⁴⁰⁶ The MB offered Mahmoud the opportunity to leave his position in return for an appointment as ambassador to the Vatican.⁴⁰⁷ Even though he initially accepted the offer, Mahmoud later refused to leave his position.⁴⁰⁸ Following this incident, ex-President Morsi issued the 2012 Constitutional Declaration to limit the appointment period of the Attorney General.⁴⁰⁹ Mahmoud—as well as the whole judiciary—refuted the Declaration, based on Article 67 of the JAL.⁴¹⁰ That article bans the dismissal of judges from their office.⁴¹¹ As a consequence, judges and prosecutors engaged in several strikes against the MB and its Declaration until the 2013 Coup.⁴¹²

Commission to get rid of noncompliant judges. This can be rectified in three steps.

First, an independent and democratic institution should be the competent authority for impeachment and investigation of disciplinary actions. At the federal level in the United States, the Constitution mandates the “good behavior” of the judiciary.⁴¹³ The U.S. Supreme Court has settled several principles in this regard.⁴¹⁴ In Nixon v. United States, the Court indicated that the Senate had the sole discretion to choose its procedures.⁴¹⁵ The chief judge of the federal district court was prosecuted and sentenced to prison for false statements before a federal grand jury.⁴¹⁶ After hearings in the Senate, senators voted in favor of Nixon’s conviction and impeachment.⁴¹⁷ The establishment of an independent institution is, therefore, discussed in detail in the last part of this Article by highlighting a proposed reform for the accountability of the judiciary.⁴¹⁸

Second, the application of the JAL violates the principle of Nulla Poena Sine Lege (“no penalty without a law”).⁴¹⁹ This principle has two dimensions. The first dimension is that the law must clearly state the illegal behavior of a judge or prosecutor, which is subject to disciplinary procedures.⁴²⁰ For example, even though the CPL did not include personal

417. Nixon, 506 U.S. at 226. The Court also maintained Hamilton’s position on judicial accountability:

The precautions for their responsibility are comprised in the article respecting impeachments. They are liable to be impeached for mal-conduct by the House of Representatives, and tried by the senate, and if convicted, may be dismissed from office and disqualified for holding any other. This is the only provision on the point, which is consistent with the necessary independence of judicial character, and is the only one which we find in our constitution in respect to our own judges.

conduct as grounds for disciplinary action, the practice of the JID considers conduct as part of disciplinary behavior.⁴²¹ In France, disciplinary action is not limited to intentional professional negligence,⁴²² but it also includes the private conduct of judges' in their personal lives.⁴²³ Judges and prosecutors do not represent themselves; they represent the institution they belong to: the judiciary. Theft and alcoholism, among other acts, constitute a violation of judges' obligations in private life in France.⁴²⁴ Second, the JAL must specify the exact punishment for each violation.⁴²⁵ It cannot be left to the authority to determine the suitable punishment.⁴²⁶ This occurred when the Disciplinary Commission impeached judges and prosecutors who made political statements after the 2013 Coup.⁴²⁷

Third, the JAL does not grant judges or prosecutors any form of safeguard measures against arbitrary actions by the Disciplinary Commission.⁴²⁸ In France, the Constitution and the Judicial Ordinance offer judges and prosecutors several safeguards against arbitrary decisions or unfair trials. Judges and prosecutors who are charged with disciplinary action (defendants) are entitled to full access to evidence and files relevant to their cases.⁴²⁹ They are not subject to any form of search or seizure by the Committee.⁴³⁰ Judges and prosecutors' houses and properties are protected as part of the immunity endowed upon them.⁴³¹

Another example of a French judicial safeguard is that decisions taken by the Committee are additionally reviewed by the Conseil d'Etat, which is the entity responsible for administrative disputes.⁴³² The significance of such a body lies in the integration between the two systems of ordinary and administrative courts. It also offers a high level of protection against arbitrary decisions. In these cases, the Conseil d'Etat acts as a juge de cassation if the defendant is a judge,⁴³³ and it acts as a

2. Transparent Disciplinary Processes

In Egypt, there is a clear lack of transparent disciplinary processes. On a smaller scale, there is no transparent impeachment process. On a broader scale, there are no general disciplinary processes. A transparent process takes on three forms. Under the first form, the whole process should be categorized as a transparent process. An example of a transparent disciplinary process can be found in the United Kingdom, where there are two aspects of judicial accountability: sacrificial accountability and explanatory accountability.⁴³⁷ Sacrificial accountability occurs when a judge commits a criminal act.⁴³⁸ Judges are subject to criminal investigation by the office of judicial complaints, where the violator is later subject to disciplinary sanctions.⁴³⁹ Explanatory accountability occurs when the actions of the judge and the reason for his or her behavior are investigated.⁴⁴⁰ The Lord Chief Justice and the Lord Chancellor are both responsible for investigating any complaints of this type of behavior.⁴⁴¹ The Judicial Conduct Investigations Office handles these types of complaints.⁴⁴² It is considered an independent body of the judiciary.⁴⁴³ This process is to guarantee public confidence in the process of accountability across the United Kingdom.

Under the second form of a transparent judicial process, the outcome of the judicial accountability process is made available to the public in order to increase its confidence in the judicial system. In the United Kingdom, the Judicial Conduct Investigations Office issues an annual report, which includes the number of complaints received.⁴⁴⁴ Between 2013 and 2014, the number of full- and part-time judiciary members was estimated at 36,000, of which 29,000 were magistrates and 7,000 tribunal members.⁴⁴⁵ Out of 2,018 total complaints, fifty-eight cases involved formal disciplinary actions.⁴⁴⁶ Complaints are first screened by the Judicial Conduct Investigations Office.⁴⁴⁷ If the complaint falls within its authority, the case is referred to the Office for Judicial Complaints.⁴⁴⁸

Under the third form of a transparent judicial process, there must be a spokesperson to address the public regarding all matters of judicial authority. Judicial affairs are not a national security issue that needs to be hidden from the public. In the United Kingdom, the judiciary offers three forms of activities: interviews and media briefings; the Lord Chief Justice's review of the administration of justice in courts; and court reports.⁴⁴⁹ As for interviews and media briefings, judges occasionally give interviews to the media.⁴⁵⁰ Since 2008, the Lord Chief Justice's office has published a periodical review of judicial matters.⁴⁵¹ The report aims to identify issues of major concern to the judiciary and justice administration.⁴⁵² As for court reports, each court must provide an annual report on their "performance throughout the year."⁴⁵³ Hence, Egypt should follow in the United Kingdom's footsteps and have all of its judiciary data made public.

3. Limited Civil and Criminal Accountability

Judicial immunity aims to protect judges and prosecutors from the executive authority.⁴⁵⁴ However, the judiciary in Egypt has expanded the application of judicial immunity to unprecedented instances in an effort to face the authoritarian regime in Egypt.⁴⁵⁵ The rules of legal immunity need to be redefined to reflect their real objective. Criminal immunity must be limited to criminal conduct of the judges inside the courtroom.⁴⁵⁶ It should not be extended to include a special status for judges and prosecutors. Offering a special status to judges and prosecutors leads to the abuse of their powers.⁴⁵⁷

Civil immunity is granted to judges to safeguard them against damages incurred from their profession.⁴⁵⁸ This form of immunity is a limited immunity.⁴⁵⁹ However, unlimited civil immunity violates the point of civil accountability of judges.⁴⁶⁰ The JAL should either abolish civil immunity of judges for nonjudicial work or ensure that procedures are clearly stated in the law. In France, civil liability for a judge for nonjudicial work starts with filing a complaint or calling for disciplinary action against a judge.⁴⁶¹ The plaintiff has to submit a complaint to the national ombudsman (médiateur de la République).⁴⁶² The complaint is first reviewed by an ombudsman associate before being taken to the next level.⁴⁶³ Therefore, a limited civil liability should be granted to Egyptian judges that does not add any procedural burdens to litigation.

B. Proposed Reform for Judicial Accountability

1. Reformulation of the SJC

It has been argued that the authority of the MoJ should be transferred to the SJC.⁴⁶⁴ However, this proposal expands judicial autonomy. This proposal implies a transfer of the authority of the MoJ from one judge (the Minister of Justice) to seven judges (the SJC).⁴⁶⁵ Any transfer of authority

460. Judicial accountability is not always accounted for in constitutions. It is disputed that legal scholars and politicians fear to involve themselves in drafting constitutional proposals. See, e.g., Shimon Shetreet, The Limits of Judicial Accountability: A Hard Look at the Judicial Officers Act 1986, 10 U. 465. The current formulation of the SJC is similar to the formulation after the 1952 Coup. It consists of seven members, who represent the various entities inside the regular judiciary. They are the president of the Court of Cassation, the first vice president of the Court of Cassation, the Cairo Court of Appeal president, the Alexandria Court of Appeal president, the Mansoura Court of Appeal to the SJC should be done only after its reformulation. The current formulation is prejudiced against fair representation of all members of the judiciary or judicial ranks and the public. A full public representation in the judiciary involves two steps: interim and permanent reforms. The interim reform should take between five and ten years. It should aim to pave the way for full public participation in judicial administration. During this period, not only should the SJC include elected members from the judiciary, as was the case before 1952,⁴⁶⁶ but the new formulation should also include senior law professors who represent the public.

The proposed temporary formulation is as follows: three representatives from the primary courts, three representatives from the courts of appeal, three representatives from the Court of Cassation, two representatives from the junior prosecution, two representatives from the senior prosecution (including the Attorney General), and five senior law professors chosen from the oldest four law schools (Cairo, Alexandria, Assuit, and Ain Shams). The permanent reform should occur at a later period, once the judiciary and the public bodies accept the idea of lay people, lawyers, and professors in the judicial administration. The formulation of the SJC during this period should include elected judges, lawyers, prominent public figures, and emeritus professors. The manner and method of choosing them should be tackled in separate research covering a later period of Egyptian judicial history.

2. Transfer of the JID to the SJC

The current proposed amendment is to transfer the JID from the MoJ to the SJC.⁴⁶⁷ It has been argued that there are three merits behind relocating this power from the MoJ to the SJC.⁴⁶⁸ First, this transfer achieves judicial independence.⁴⁶⁹ This advantage, however, is not tangible. There is no concept of a multi-party system in the Egyptian government and especially in the Minister of Justice position. Ordinary court judges never accept a Minister of Justice from the administrative judiciary, as was the case with Judge Mahdi,⁴⁷⁰ who was later appointed president (instead of the representative of the MoJ), and the Attorney General. Law No. 46 of 1972 (Judicial Authority Law), al-Jarīdah al-Rasmīyah, 5 Oct. 1972, art. 77, bis (1) (Egypt).

as the Minister of Transitional Justice.⁴⁷¹ Besides, all members of the JID are judges who are on secondment to the department.⁴⁷²

Second, the Minister of Justice uses the JID to retaliate against unwanted judges.⁴⁷³ For example, during the impeachment process of the judges of Raba'a, the chairperson of the Impeachment Committee,⁴⁷⁴ who is also the president of the SJC, jailed Judge Awad during the disciplinary proceedings for violating the Commission's order.⁴⁷⁵ When the rest of the Raba'a judges requested the chairperson to step down from the Committee, Al-Zend adamantly refused their request.⁴⁷⁶ As a result, the chairperson was both the plaintiff and the judge in the same case.

Third, the formulation of the Committee is undemocratic. The Committee faces a legitimacy dilemma because neither the people nor the judges choose its members. The role of the JID in the MoJ is limited to investigating violations committed by judges and prosecuting cases before the Committee. The Committee is the only authority that has the right to impeach a judge. The Committee consists of seven members, six of whom are members of the SJC.⁴⁷⁷ The authority of impeaching a judge therefore lies in the hands of the SJC.⁴⁷⁸

Moreover, the JID and the Impeachment Committee rules must be replaced. The proposed amendment is to establish an Independent Impeachment Committee (IIC), as well as transfer the JID to the SJC. There are three advantages to adopting such a solution. First, the IIC indicates a democratic choice of the impeachment committee members. Second, nonjudicial members make significant contributions to the accountability process. The choice of these members can be made on a seniority basis or by an internal election among judges in selecting these lawyers and professors. Third, the transfer of the JID to the SJC must be conditional upon the reformulation of the SJC. The SJC must include elected, nonelected, judicial, and nonjudicial members. If the reformulation is not adopted and the JID is transferred to the SJC, little change would occur. On the contrary, it would be considered a threat to judicial independence. Judges can still put up a resistance to the MoJ, as it is still subject to political responsibility.⁴⁷⁹ Judges will not be able to put up any resistance to the SJC. The current formulation of the SJC places it at a higher level of accountability to both the judiciary and the public. As a result, the judges and the public would not be able to fight the inconsistency of the decisions of the SJC.⁴⁸⁰

3. Reform of the Position of the Minister of Justice

The current function of the primary court chairperson is that of supervising judges. This role must change.⁴⁸¹ In Germany, the president of the court oversees the work of judges.⁴⁸² Such supervision cannot conflict with their independence.⁴⁸³ There are two conditions attached to this type of supervision. First, judges shall be subject to the supervision as long as it does not conflict with their independence.⁴⁸⁴ Second, if a judge “contends that a supervisory measure detracts from his independence, a court shall give a ruling in compliance with this Act.”⁴⁸⁵ A clear distinction between the judiciary and the MoJ should be in force. The MoJ shall not be chosen from the SJC or any newly retired judge. The work of the MoJ contradicts with judicial work. Appointment of a recent former judge increases the notion that this position is a reward for compliance with the executive authority. To avoid such a hypothesis, a time delay of five years must be introduced. No judge should take on an executive position after his or her retirement until five years has passed. This period will function as a safeguard against attempts to buy the loyalty and allegiance of judges—including SJC members.

CONCLUSION

The 2013 Military Coup succeeded in suspending all calls for judicial reform.⁴⁸⁶ The Egyptian judicial system, however, faces an interconnected web of serious problems. This Article attempts to answer the question of why judicial institutions are in need of reform. It lists the judicial failures in facing serious economic, social, legal, and political challenges. The contemporary challenges facing Egypt are not secluded from the judicial challenges. Legal activists, including lawyers, judges, and NGO members, have long called for reform. This Article endeavors to shed light on the importance of judicial reform, especially with regard to judicial accountability in Egypt. The inability of the judiciary to respond to ongoing challenges continues to prevent the progress of society as a whole. Strong governmental institutions need an independent and accountable judiciary to reinforce the law.

This Article makes four recommendations. First, the judiciary must adopt clear rules of political participation and issue sanctions for violations. It is unacceptable that rules banning political participation apply only to opponents of the political regime. The JID must apply rules equally; they are not a tool of retribution against political rivals. Second, the judiciary must be excluded from the electoral process to fulfill its main role of protecting the legality of the process instead of protecting the process itself. Third, the judiciary must accept the political responsibility of its actions. It is unacceptable for an independent judiciary to be above political participation. Fourth, a new formulation of the Supreme Judicial Council must be introduced to reflect a democratic and accountable judiciary to the public because the public is the source of its authority.
