I. Executive summary

The International Human Rights Clinic of Seattle University School of Law* and Kino Border Initiative have interviewed, in both the United States and Mexico, over 25 refugees from Guerrero, Mexico, human rights experts on Mexico, and the Honorable Nestora Salgado, the national senator from Guerrero. We have also conducted extensive factual and legal research into the current situation in Southern Mexico, and draw upon more than 15 years of experience working in the region. We conclude that numerous refugees from Guerrero should qualify for asylum under U.S. law, and summarize our findings and analysis here:

- Powerful criminal organizations have caused chaos in the state of Guerrero, Mexico, and have inflicted tremendous violence. Guerrero residents have been constant victims of brutal killings, torture, aggravated rape, kidnappings, assault, forced displacement, economic crimes, and deep psychological trauma.
- The concept of a “particular social group” (PSG) is central to U.S. asylum law, allowing individuals to seek protection based on their membership in a group with common, immutable characteristics. In Guerrero, there are numerous potential PSG, including but not limited to: indigenous and Afro-Mexican persons, women, LGBTQ+ individuals, students, business owners, transportation workers, human rights defenders, journalists, political leaders, and other victims and witnesses of certain crimes. Recognizing these groups is crucial to ensure that they receive the full protection they are entitled to under international and U.S. asylum law.
- Sixteen criminal organizations have terrorized Guerrero, a strategic hub for drug trafficking in Mexico. In addition, State actors—including soldiers, police, and government officials—are responsible for human rights violations by actively taking part in killings and disappearances, colluding with criminal groups, and blocking accountability for their own abuses and the crimes of cartels.

* The following Clinic members, all law students, conducted interviews and drafted this report: Chris Flory (also served as Research Assistant), Calista Bechtold, Tyler Beckum, Andrew Kuna, Lisa Lee, Ankita Mishra, and Catherine Mitri. Professor Thomas Antkowiak supervised the interviewing and drafting process. Matias Antkowiak also assisted with several interviews. The Clinic extends its deep gratitude to Zoe Martens, formerly of KBI, for her keen vision and many vital contributions to this report.
  For their safety and security, we have replaced the actual names of the interviewed Guerrero refugees with pseudonyms (using only a first-name pseudonym, such as “Santiago” or “Jimena”).

- o Government officials in Guerrero have shown they are unwilling or unable to protect victims of violence, deter rampant crime or provide accountability for these widespread illegal acts. With impunity levels sky high, Guerrero residents justifiably cannot trust the government to act independently from organized crime, to ensure their safety or to remedy human rights violations.
- o The national reach of organized crime in Mexico is well documented. When Guerrero residents seek safety in other parts of the country, the strategy often proves tragically ineffective. Criminal groups have extensive networks and sophisticated methods that allow them to find and kill targets across Mexico.

II. Why are residents fleeing Guerrero?

Powerful criminal organizations have caused chaos in Guerrero and have inflicted tremendous violence on the innocent residents. Residents in Guerrero have been constant victims of massacres, other violent killings, torture, aggravated rape, kidnappings, assault, forced displacement, economic crimes, and deep psychological trauma, as discussed in the following sections.¹

A. PHYSICAL HARM

1 Types of Physical Harm:

Physical harms documented in this report range from extremes such as murder, torture, and sexual violence to other crimes like assault and theft. The following section briefly discusses crimes commonly committed by criminal organizations in Guerrero. Frequently, these crimes target specific groups, which is further explained in this report's Section III.

i Murder

Many individuals in Guerrero have been murdered by criminal organizations, who often wield heavy machine guns and deploy drones for bombings in targeted attacks.² For instance, we interviewed Santiago, whose two sons were killed as part of a scheme targeting their business for extortion.³ Often criminal groups kidnap and subsequently murder people for opposing their recruitment efforts.⁴ Cartels also target taxi drivers and street cleaners during their violent battles for control over routes, evidenced by several crimes like the recent murder of Omar Reina Abarca, the leader of the Real de Oro Taxi Drivers Organization.⁵

Additionally, revenge killings for reporting crimes to authorities or resisting cartel activities are tragically common,⁶ including in cases of community police groups,⁷ human rights defenders, journalists, activists,⁸ and media reporters (see also Section III).⁹ For example, on July 15, 2023, Nelson Matus, the director of news website Lo Real de Guerrero who routinely reported about crimes in the state, was fatally shot outside

a store in Acapulco, Guerrero, leading to renewed calls for the protection of Mexico's media community.¹⁰ In 2023, Global Witness reported that 31 environmental activists were killed in 2022, while the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) documented at least 13 murders of human rights defenders during that year.¹¹

Moreover, the cartels resort to extreme measures like shooting or bombing with remotely-operated drones¹² to eliminate competition and acquire land and properties.¹³ For example, in the town of San Agustín El Viejo, located in the mountains of Guerrero, hitmen shot and killed five or six victims so they could seize indigenous territories to control the production and trade of poppies and other drugs.¹⁴ A drug cartel also set off a series of eight remotely-operated road bombs to ambush police officers, killing four officers and two civilians.¹⁵ Simply witnessing criminal acts can lead to fatal consequences.¹⁶

Even political leaders and elected officials are not safe in Guerrero.¹⁷ In 2022, the most political violence in all of Mexico was observed in the states of Guerrero, Veracruz, and Guanajuato.¹⁸ For instance, on October

5, 2022, Conrado Mendoza, Mayor of San Miguel Totolapa, Guerrero, was assassinated along with 19 other individuals and city leaders by alleged members of the criminal group La Familia Michoacana.¹⁹ In 2023, both the representative of Mexico's Attorney General Office²⁰ and a prosecutor for the state prosecutor's office were both killed.²¹ Further, Integralia Consultores' political violence report warned of the growing intervention of organized crime in the 2024 Mexico local and municipal elections, to either force candidates to cooperate or to eliminate them, placing Guerrero as one of the highest-risk states for candidates.²²

Guerrero has also witnessed several cases where people are burned alive along with their houses, lands, and vehicles, especially through the deployment of bombs.²³ In order to protect their property from being taken over by the criminal groups, residents try to defend their property, or are simply unable to flee in time, leading to their gruesome deaths.²⁴ The crime of burning people alive in their vehicles has observed an increase since the war began between cartels to control transport routes.²⁵ For instance, two taxi drivers were brutally killed in Chilpancingo where one driver was shot and burned alive along with his vehicle, and the other driver was shot and left to die.²⁶ Another form of this crime is burning people with substances like acid while they are kidnapped and detained.²⁷ In fact, the increased occurrence of this crime prompted the Permanent Secretariat to approve the resolution to criminalize acid attacks in twenty-two Mexican states, including in Guerrero.²⁸ The cartels also burn residents' property, including wooden houses and cars, in their absence.²⁹

The fragmentation of cartels and their struggle for power has greatly increased the violence experienced in Guerrero, with almost 2,000 homicides in 2017 for a population of approximately 3.3 million.³⁰ With 1,688 murders in 2023, Guerrero ranks very high nationally in the number of homicides due to organized crime disputes, as reported by the Secretariat of Security and Citizen Protection (SSPC).³¹ Between January and June of 2023, Guerrero suffered a 20% increase in the number of victims of intentional homicides, with 800 official murder reports.³² Additionally, Guerrero experienced one of the highest rates for violent deaths of police officers, with 34 reported murders in 2023.³³

Rates of femicide also remain high, with approximately nine women murdered per day in 2023.³⁴

ii Kidnapping

Criminal organizations commonly use kidnapping as a tactic to extort money from victims and their families or force them to pay debts. For instance, we met with Elena, a successful business owner who was held hostage in the wilderness for three weeks until her family could collect the required ransom money.³⁷ Another man we spoke to, Nicolás, was kidnapped by a criminal group and held hostage for three days until he could pay off his alleged debts.³⁸ If individuals are unable to pay these monthly cuotas,³⁹ their children could be kidnapped; even after paying the criminal groups, the children may not be returned.⁴⁰ Cartels have also turned to the extortion and kidnapping of indigenous community members and started illegal mining operations in their territories for 39 Cuotas are also referred to as "cargos de piso" or "derecho de piso." These are fees or 'taxes' that a person must pay to the relevant criminal organization in exchange for supposed "protection" or to be simply left alone. These cuotas are prevalent in two scenarios: the first is to inflict direct financial harm to a person's livelihood and the second is a tool of oppression. The Spanish word "cuota" will be used throughout this report to differentiate these extortionary practices of criminal groups from other types of general fees or taxes taken by the State.

While in captivity, victims endure inhuman treatment, such as being tied up, tortured, beaten, and raped.⁴² Criminal organizations have also been known to feed victims to animals like tigers so that their bodies are torn apart, they become unidentifiable, and they are never found.⁴³

Initially, people were targeted and kidnapped by criminal organizations because they were wealthy.⁴⁴ However, in recent times, individuals are being kidnapped irrespective of their financial status, as the criminals know that families will go to great lengths, even to the extent of taking out large loans, to pay the ransom.⁴⁵ Further, kidnapping is also used as a recruitment method, with young children and teenagers forcibly taken to work for the cartels, facing death if they refuse.⁴⁶

Although kidnappings are widespread, official statistics from the National Public Security System (NPSS) do not align with reality due to severe underreporting.⁴⁷ To illustrate, the National Survey on Victimization and Perception of Public Safety indicates that approximately 94% of kidnappings went unreported in 2019.⁴⁸ Based on this survey, experts have estimated that around 2,875 kidnappings actually occurred in Guerrero alone that year, far surpassing government

figures from NPSS.⁴⁹

iii Forced Disappearances

In Guerrero, many kidnapped individuals are forcefully disappeared; their remains are hidden in clandestine graves and never found.⁵⁰ Human rights defenders and environmental activists are widely attacked and threatened to deter them from uncovering the truths and pursuing actions against these criminals.⁵¹ In addition to murder and kidnapping, many human rights defenders have vanished, including the forced disappearances of Alejandro Ortiz Vazquez in Metlatonoc, Guerrero, in April 2023 and Antonio Diaz Valencia and Ricardo Lagunes in January 2023.⁵² Members of the LGBTQ+ community also face several types of violence, including forced disappearance. In September 2023, Moisés Tomás Juárez Abarca, a Progressive Left activist and leader of sexual diversity in Acapulco, Guerrero, was reported missing along with Jesús Arroyo, Brian Vargas, and three other individuals.⁵³ The relatives of individuals disappeared or murdered by cartels also face grave risk of murder, threats, and physical aggression, when seeking out information about their loved ones or denouncing the crimes committed against them.⁵⁴

The rate of forced disappearances in Mexico generally and Guerrero specifically are exceedingly high. During the year 2022 alone, Mexican authorities registered at least 9,826 cases of missing and disappeared persons.⁵⁵ Yet there had been only 36 convictions for the crime of disappearance according to the Mexican National Search Commission (CNB).⁵⁶ These numbers continued to increase in 2023, with at least 12,031 cases of missing and disappeared people registered with the CNB.⁵⁷ Guerrero, for its part, is notorious for its crisis of forced disappearances. In one of the nation's most infamous cases, 43 students were forcibly disappeared from Ayotzinapa, Guerrero in 2014.⁵⁸ More recently, within the short span from December 23, 2023, to the first week of January 2024, 14 people were officially missing in Taxco de Alarcón, Guerrero.⁵⁹ However, authorities regularly fail to take the basic steps to find these individuals, including conducting prompt, exhaustive, and impartial investigations, leading to near-total impunity for disappearances—a situation that has been denounced by the United Nations Committee on Enforced Disappearances (CED).⁶⁰

iv Shootings and Gun Violence

Another approach employed by cartels to threaten people is shooting and gun violence, with or without the intent to kill, in the form of either a targeted shooting or indiscriminate open fire. In some cases, people suffer instances of targeted shooting by criminal groups with the intent to kill.⁶¹ The targets could be specific individuals for various reasons or persons belonging to specific professions like transportation workers,⁶² activists, journalists, or even police officers. For instance, four public transportation workers were killed by gunfire in the capital city of Chilpancingo, initiated by the criminal organizations, Los Ardillos and Los Tlacos.⁶³ A dozen police officers, including the Municipal Police Chief and a local security supervisor, were killed on October 23, 2023, in an open-fire ambush in a coastal town north of Acapulco, Guerrero.⁶⁴ On May 11, 2023, Gerardo Torres Renteria, a retired cameraman and reporter for Telemundo, was shot in his home in Acapulco, Guerrero.⁶⁵

In other cases, shooting is used to coerce individuals. We spoke with Sofia, whose spouse was shot in the face in front of her, to force her into selling drugs for the criminal group.⁶⁶ Additionally, hitmen often open fire at homes or towns when unable to gain entry, showing no regard for whether innocent bystanders or the target's family members are also present.⁶⁷ In another interview, Romina recounted that a 5-year-old boy was killed in a shootout, where several people pursued by gunmen were thrown off a church's belltower to the streets and died.⁶⁸ The indiscriminate use of dangerous weapons demonstrates the callous disregard cartels have for human life in this region.

v Assault and Robbery

An alternative strategy the criminal organizations employ to spread fear and retain control of the residents of Guerrero is to assault and rob them. The people of Guerrero suffer a wide array of assaults and robberies at the hands of criminal organizations that vary in harm and severity. It is quite common for people to get mugged, beaten up, and robbed of their wallets, vehicles, passports, cell phones, and personal belongings.⁶⁹ Further, people are insulted, thrown to the ground, and threatened with guns to their heads.⁷⁰ According to our interview with Santiago, a woman six months pregnant with twins suffered a miscarriage when the criminals attacked her.⁷¹ In another interview, Sofia told us about an assault on a man who was stripped naked, tied to a car by a rope, and dragged on the road, with the intent to punish and kill him.⁷²

vi Gender and Sexual Violence

Rape and sexual violence against women and girls are very common, often committed by criminal organizations as well as military personnel.⁷³ As demonstrated by Elena's personal experience, sexual harassment in the workplace further compounds the suffering for women who have already been forced to flee their homes due to violence and are trying to earn money to support themselves and their families.⁷⁴ Men also face rape while held in captivity by criminal groups.⁷⁵

In 2022, the Mexican government reported about 3,757 killings of women, one-quarter of which were considered femicides (killings of women specifically because of their gender).⁷⁶ Women's rights advocates state that femicide is likely under-reported.⁷⁷ The gender violence was primarily concentrated in 4 states, including Guerrero.⁷⁸

vii Forced Displacement

Due to the dramatically-increased instances of violence in Guerrero, forced displacement of its residents has become very prevalent.⁷⁹ People are forced to flee, leaving behind their homes, lands, and vehicles, due to severe violence making it untenable to continue to live in the state.⁸⁰ For example, according to our interview with Victoria, an indigenous man from her village in the mountains was killed because he was fighting to protect his land, cattle, and agricultural business from the cartels.⁸¹ After fleeing their homes, victims often leave Guerrero and remain in hiding until they can obtain an asylum appointment with the US government.⁸² Forced displacement has become a major problem in Guerrero; over 84% of the people leaving Guerrero flee due to the widespread violence.⁸³ Additionally, in 2023, Guerrero,

2 Frequency and Extent of Physical Harm:

The criminal organizations often subject the people of Guerrero to repeated physical harms either as a way of ensuring compliance or instilling fear in them. Sometimes, when criminal groups are trying to recruit people by threatening them, beating them, or kidnapping them, these harms are inflicted multiple times.⁸⁵ Repeated harms are also inflicted when extorting people and beating them for non-payment of debts and cuotas.⁸⁶ Crimes like shooting are often committed several times when people are targeted for specific reasons like extortion, revenge, and for filing reports and lawsuits.⁸⁷

In cases when victims have financial resources, they seek medical attention at private hospitals or through house calls.⁸⁸ Crime victims avoid public hospitals if possible, because of the fear and real possibility that the criminal groups will come into hospitals and attack them.⁸⁹ For instance, after the man Sofia witnessed being shot in the face was taken to a medical clinic, he disappeared and was never found again, despite a prolonged search.⁹⁰

3 Reporting of Physical Harm:

While crime rates in Guerrero are extremely high, the reporting of those crimes to relevant authorities is disproportionately low. As observed by Elías and several other interviewees, it is apparent that despite people's wishes to report the crimes, they are often unable to do so because of the fear instilled in them by criminal groups, who often retaliate.⁹¹ Sometimes, people are even advised by their lawyers to not report crimes, including murder, because if the criminals find out, it is almost certain that the reporter will be killed⁹² (see also Section V).

Alternatively, even when people summon the courage to report crimes, the authorities like police or public prosecutors do not assist the victim. Instead, they treat victims poorly,⁹³ use threats to silence them,⁹⁴ or simply do nothing to investigate the crime and ignore the victims,⁹⁵ resulting in very high impunity levels (see also Section V). Romina, who suffered the deaths of her two sons and witnessed the assault of her partner and grandchildren by criminal groups, expressed her anguish: "There's no authority in all of Guerrero; criminals have a free pass to do whatever they want, and no one stops them."⁹⁶

The stark lack of reporting crimes can also be attributed to the limitations, whether coerced or personal, faced by the authorities and the criminal justice system. The criminal groups are extremely powerful and influential, causing even the authorities to greatly fear the cartels, who threaten to kill officials and/or their families if they take any action to file or resolve the reports.⁹⁷ Further, corruption has invaded the police and military in Guerrero; several actively collaborate with criminal groups, either for personal gain or by force and fear.⁹⁸ This is also a common reason why these authorities take no action when crimes are reported or even occur in front of them.⁹⁹ There are instances where police actually escort the cartel members during criminal operations; also, cartel members will pay or pressure for a quick release from jail, and then immediately threaten all who reported them.¹⁰⁰ Jimena explained to us that “No sane person in Mexico would file a report against organized crime, knowing one’s life would be at risk... you will never see that happen.”¹⁰¹

B. ECONOMIC HARMS

Residents of Guerrero experience numerous economic harms at the hands of the rampant criminal organizations in Guerrero. The vast majority of economic harms that the people of Guerrero endure take the form of cuotas or “derecho de piso”.¹⁰² These are fees or ‘taxes’ that a person must pay to the relevant criminal organization in exchange for supposed “protection” or to be simply left alone.¹⁰³ These cuotas are prevalent in two scenarios: the first is to inflict direct financial harm to a person’s livelihood and the second is a tool of oppression.

The first type of cuota harms a person’s livelihood. Often these cuotas are charged to people who are business owners or sellers of goods.¹⁰⁴ For example, a business owner, like the owner of a mechanic shop, may be required to pay weekly or monthly,¹⁰⁵ but a fisherman or tortilla maker may be required to pay per day¹⁰⁶. Frequently, if any person has a source of stable income, they are expected to pay a *cuota*¹⁰⁷. The criminal organizations have intensified the use of violence against business owners and salespeople to ensure they make these payments in a timely manner.¹⁰⁸

The second type of cuota involves oppression through financial manipulation. This is a way for the criminal organizations to ‘send messages’ or to create a vulnerability in the residents. Commonly, criminal organizations will charge a person a cuota simply to ensure the safety of a person’s family; this is especially applicable to individuals who have children.¹⁰⁹

As discussed above, failure to pay these cuotas has very tangible and immediate consequences, including threats, kidnapping, beatings, and in many instances killings.¹¹⁰ If a person refuses to pay these cuotas, they could be killed very soon.¹¹¹ On other occasions, the criminal organization may continue to increase the price of the cuota to the point that it becomes unmanageable for people to pay.

The criminal organizations inflict other economic harms by stealing valuable property, such as vehicles or homes.¹¹² In her interview, Sofia explained how she was prevented from earning a livelihood selling her wares because she was constantly followed and intimidated by cartel members.¹¹³ She ignored them and refused to cooperate; subsequently, Sofia’s partner was beaten and they taunted her, “do you see what happens when you don’t help us?”¹¹⁴ Then, they attacked her. During the assault, Sofia heard a gunshot—the men had killed her partner.¹¹⁵

Other ways that the criminal organizations impose economic harm is by kidnapping an individual and demanding ransoms, even of working-class families.¹¹⁶ Many times, the ransom requests are high,¹¹⁷ requiring families to pay in installments.¹¹⁸ For example, interviewees David and Emilia were asked to pay two million pesos.¹¹⁹ The promise of ransom payment is not a guarantee of safety; kidnapped persons are often treated brutally by cartels.¹²⁰ Victoria reported to us that, sometimes – even after full payment – the victim is still killed.¹²¹

Further, criminal organizations seize private lands as well as indigenous communal territories in Guerrero.¹²² Often the criminal organizations will target lands with lucrative crops.¹²³ They have also taken over mines and other extractive industries in the state.¹²⁴

The criminal organizations impact the general economy of Guerrero by charging an increased tax on staples like wheat, flour, chicken, soda, milk products, and beer.¹²⁵ Additionally, the criminal organizations require a percentage (such as 10%) of government resources that are destined for specific municipalities to be redirected to the criminal organization.¹²⁶ As a result, governmental economic support intended to bolster community services in these poverty-stricken towns can be often lost to organized crime.

C. OTHER CRITICAL IMPACTS AND HARMS ON GUERRERO RESIDENTS

It is important to also recognize the psychological harms and structural harms suffered by Guerrero residents. Psychological harms implicate the mental and emotional effects that the above-mentioned experiences have on the residents. Structural harms describe the ways that the criminal organizations have infiltrated the community to destroy cohesion and safety.

1 Psychological Harms:

Along with the many physical and economic harms that the residents of Guerrero suffer, they often experience enduring psychological consequences like fear, depression, and anxiety. Research indicates that pervasive violence can deeply undermine psychological well-being.¹²⁷ For example, Nicolás—who was kidnapped, raped and beaten—explained to us that now, after his escape, he lives in a constant state of apprehension and depression.¹²⁸ Persistent fear and depression are common for those who have been kidnapped.¹²⁹ In addition, whole families live in fear that their family members will be killed or abducted.¹³⁰

Most frequently, residents of Guerrero have expressed that they live in a constant state of fear because of the way that the criminal organizations control the region. For example, the cartels frequently will use verbal threats of blackmail and harm to family members and insults as a way of dehumanizing the residents and ensuring compliance.¹³¹ This makes residents fearful of speaking out against the harms. Often, criminal organizations will block transportation between towns, cities, and other states to effectuate control of movement.¹³² This makes residents dread that they cannot escape the violence. Similarly, the criminal organizations will use public displays like killings, dismemberments,¹³³ attacks on taxi and bus drivers¹³⁴, and revenge murders¹³⁵ to ensure that people do not retaliate or report any crimes to the authorities.¹³⁶ Often the mutilation of bodies is meant to send a message to other residents to warn of potential consequences of disobeying a command or reporting to the authorities.¹³⁷ For example, one recent threat directed at a government official, Norma Otilia Hernandez, took the form of seven decapitated persons in Chilpancingo, Guerrero.¹³⁸ Relatedly, the representatives of the criminal organizations dress like Mexican soldiers and carry large weapons,¹³⁹ causing paranoia and confusion in the streets of Guerrero.

2 Structural Harms:

In Guerrero, criminal organizations have infiltrated various community institutions, like government and education, to create further oppression. Structural harm describes the ways that criminal organizations have destabilized the infrastructure in Guerrero as a means of controlling the residents.¹⁴⁰

In the educational context, many schools have been forced to shut down for periods of time or indefinitely because the danger is too great for children.¹⁴¹ In Acapulco, many schools have closed temporarily or permanently because of gun violence and assaults on students.¹⁴²

As for government, criminal organizations have seized political power by buying elections for candidates that they subsequently control.¹⁴³ Cartels constantly pressure prosecutors, government officials and police.¹⁴⁴ Guerrero is known throughout Mexico as a “hotspot” for violence targeted at political figures.¹⁴⁵

All the physical and economic harms and threats described above lead to a true vulnerability of many Guerrero residents, forcing them either to work for the criminal organizations or to flee Guerrero.¹⁴⁶ As described in Section VI below, escaping

the state is difficult, because the criminal organizations control the entry and exit of residents, and the criminal organizations have large networks that extend across the country.¹⁴⁷ Many attempt to seek asylum in the United States; however, if their petitions are rejected, they frequently suffer homelessness and drug addiction, as a result of their fear, depression, and other related traumas.¹⁴⁸ Of course, entire families—especially with young children—cannot always make the difficult journey to the United States, and thus many families are separated for long periods of time.¹⁴⁹

III. What groups, communities or categories of persons have been harmed?

The concept of a “particular social group” is fundamental in asylum law, allowing individuals to seek protection based on their membership in a group that shares certain immutable characteristics or a fundamental aspect of their identity. This section explores the definition of a particular social group (PSG) in the context of asylum law and considers potential groups that might exist in Guerrero, Mexico, based on evidence from country reports, news articles, and direct interviews with asylum seekers, political leaders, human rights lawyers, and anthropologists.

A. DEFINITION OF A PARTICULAR SOCIAL GROUP

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) has established a three-part test for evaluating whether a group qualifies as a PSG: (1) whether the group shares an immutable characteristic; (2) whether the group is socially distinct within their society; and (3) whether the group can be defined with particularity.¹⁵⁰ Notably, this test departs from the guidelines of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, which indicate that a social group can be based on either an immutable characteristic or social distinction disjunctively.¹⁵¹ Further, the Seventh Circuit (comprising Illinois, Wisconsin, and Indiana) is unique in that it has declined to apply the requirements of social distinction and particularity, and therefore may allow for more social groups as they need only share a common, immutable characteristic.¹⁵²

1 Immutable Characteristic

Under international and US asylum law, a particular social group is defined as a group of persons who share a common, immutable characteristic that is so fundamental to their identities or consciences that members cannot or should not be required to change it.¹⁵³ Immutable characteristics can be innate—gender, race, ethnicity, skin color, or family relationships—or based on shared past experiences such as land ownership.¹⁵⁴ When an individual voluntarily assumes a trait defining a group and becomes a member of that group—despite serious risk of harm for doing so—it strongly indicates that the trait is fundamental to their identity and they should not be required to change it.¹⁵⁵ The potential breadth of a PSG is irrelevant, and a recognized group may contain only a few individuals or a large number of people forming a substantial portion of the population.¹⁵⁶ For instance, a group “defined by gender plus one or more narrowing characteristics” can properly constitute a particular social group.¹⁵⁷

society-by-society basis.¹⁶³ In Pirir-Boc, the Ninth Circuit noted that “[i]t is an error...to assume that if a social group...has been found non-cognizable in one society, it will not be cognizable in any society....[D]ifferent local responses...in nations with distinct histories, populations, and government structures, may well result in a different social recognition of social groups.”¹⁶⁴

2 Social Distinction

Social distinction requires that the group be recognized as a distinct entity by society, distinguishing its members from the general population.¹⁵⁸ Outward visibility is not required to establish distinctness,¹⁵⁹ nor is it necessary for the group to explicitly identify itself as a group.¹⁶⁰ Social distinction should be assessed from the perspective of society as a whole, residents of a particular region, or members of different social groups, rather than that of the persecutors (e.g., criminal organizations or perpetrators of state violence).¹⁶¹ Evidence of country conditions, witness testimony, press accounts, and cultural practices of a society can establish distinctness of a group.¹⁶²

Significantly, social distinction must be evaluated on both a case-by-case and

3 Particularity

Particularity refers to the group’s specificity and the clarity of its definition, ensuring that it is not overly broad or vague.¹⁶⁵ There is no limit on the size of a particular social group, as long as it has clear boundaries and individuals are identifiable.¹⁶⁶ Characteristics defining a group should make it clear who belongs to the group and who does not.¹⁶⁷ Characteristics should be analyzed as a whole, not individually, to avoid missing the forest for the trees.¹⁶⁸ For example, although a group cannot be defined solely based on subjugation to similar harms, past harm can give rise to a socially-distinct, particularly-defined group if it creates an independent reason why survivors within the group would be discriminated against, ostracized, or targeted for additional harm in the future.¹⁶⁹

B. RECOGNIZED SOCIAL GROUPS

Membership in a particular social group is a broad and evolving concept. Case law has previously recognized social groups in categories broadly defined by family membership, ancestry, age, gender and/or sexual identity, landownership, and former military/police membership.

The family remains the quintessential PSG.¹⁷⁰ Courts have frequently recognized family members of those who actively oppose gangs as a particular social group.¹⁷¹ This recognition extends to family members of someone who has been kidnapped by a criminal gang for ransom,¹⁷² as well as parents of children who have resisted gang recruitment.¹⁷³ Individuals who are “taking concrete steps to oppose gang membership and gang authority” can also form a particularized social group.¹⁷⁴ Family membership has also been applied to members of a clan or subclan that form roughly 1% of the national population who face discrimination.¹⁷⁵

Landownership is also considered a characteristic that someone should not be required to change. As such, courts have recognized as valid social groups Mexican landowners/farmers targeted by the Zeta cartel¹⁷⁶ and an “educated, landowning class of cattle farmers” targeted as the “preferred victims” of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Columbia.¹⁷⁷

Regarding ancestry, the courts have previously recognized Filipinos of Chinese ancestry living in the Philippines.¹⁷⁸ Akateko indigenous Mayans and indigenous females marginalized by society have also been recognized as a particular social group.¹⁷⁹

Age can serve as the basis for a cognizable PSG because a person’s age is not within their control at either the time of past persecution or persecution feared in the future.¹⁸⁰ The foremost groups established based on age have been young Albanian women who live alone¹⁸¹ and former child soldiers who escaped their enslavement.¹⁸² Identifiable student groups should also be considered based on their age-related characteristics since a child’s age is not within their control.¹⁸³

As to gender and sexual identity, exemplary recognized groups have consisted of homosexuals in Cuba,¹⁸⁴ gay men with female sexual identities in Mexico,¹⁸⁵ and married women in Guatemala who are unable to leave their relationship.¹⁸⁶ Other gender-based characteristics can also serve as a basis for defining a particular social group.¹⁸⁷

Former membership in a military or police force can also serve as the basis for a social group. Former police officers have typically been targeted for their membership in the force rather than for specific past professional acts.¹⁸⁸ This has led to the recognition

C. PARTICULAR SOCIAL GROUPS IN GUERRERO, MEXICO

Guerrero has been plagued by violence, corruption, and impunity, leading to widespread human rights abuses.¹⁹¹ A close analysis of direct interviews with asylum seekers, political leaders, human rights lawyers, and anthropologists, as well as an examination of country reports, news articles, and other sources suggest that several cognizable particular social groups exist in the state of Guerrero, as described below. By no means does the present section purport to offer an exhaustive list of potential PSGs in Guerrero. Rather, an open-ended discussion follows, identifying several groups that comport with the definitions and established case law referenced above.

1 Journalists

Journalists, and especially female journalists, have been subjected to violence throughout Mexico, leading to self-censorship due to fear of reprisal from government officials and transnational criminal organizations.¹⁹² Guerrero is known to be one of the deadliest places to practice journalism in the Americas.¹⁹³ Journalist Lydia Cacho was tortured in the neighboring state of Puebla for exposing the involvement of government officials and business leaders in a child sex trafficking ring.¹⁹⁴ In addition, journalists are subjected to cyberattacks, harassment, and intimidation.¹⁹⁵ In 2022, at least 11 journalists were killed because of their work,¹⁹⁶ including Fredid Román of Guerrero.¹⁹⁷ Of 331 attacks against journalists between January and June 2022, half involved journalists covering corruption in politics.¹⁹⁸ Many of these attacks have been linked to criminal groups.¹⁹⁹ The threats against journalists by criminal groups are known to be particularly high in the states of Guerrero, Sonora, Veracruz, and Michoacán,²⁰⁰ and are largely met with impunity for their perpetrators.²⁰¹ In the summer of 2023, the director of news website Lo Real de Guerrero, Nelson Matus, who routinely reported about crimes in the state, and retired Telemundo reporter Gerardo Torres Renteria were both fatally shot in Acapulco, Guerrero.²⁰² Therefore a particular social group could comprise “female journalists” or “journalists working in Guerrero,” or more narrowly “journalists in Guerrero who cover politics,” or “female journalists in Guerrero who cover criminal activity,” or “Afro-Mexican or indigenous journalists,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to journalists.

2 Human Rights Defenders

Human rights defenders in Guerrero are at increased risk of persecution and lethal violence from both state actors and criminal groups.²⁰³ This is particularly true of those protesting against government involvement with gender-based violence and environmental degradation.²⁰⁴ At least 93 environmental defenders have disappeared in Mexico in the past 15 years, the majority of whom were defending indigenous lands from mining or logging projects.²⁰⁵ Retaliation against female human rights defenders is known to be particularly violent and includes sexual violence.²⁰⁶ Numerous human rights lawyers have also been disappeared, wrongfully imprisoned or killed.²⁰⁷ In February 2022, Kenia Hernández Montalbán, an indigenous Amuzga lawyer and women’s rights defender in Guerrero, was sentenced to 10 years in prison on false charges after being unlawfully detained in a maximum-security prison since April 2021.²⁰⁸ On January 15, 2023, the renowned human rights lawyer and defender of environmental and indigenous rights, Ricardo Lagunes Gasca, was abducted and disappeared in the neighboring state of Michoacán.²⁰⁹

Further, anyone who reports cartel members to the police, or speaks out against the police, is also likely to face violent retaliation.²¹⁰ This is particularly true for those who serve as witnesses in the criminal prosecution of cartel members.²¹¹

Therefore, a particular social group might comprise “someone who reported criminal group activity to the police,” or more specifically “someone who is facing retaliation or extortion after filing a police report,” or “someone who has actively opposed cartels by agreeing to be prosecutorial witnesses, and their family members,” “someone who has openly protested against environmental misfeasance,” or “someone who has openly protested sexual violence perpetrated by the government,” or “human rights attorneys working in Guerrero or with clients in Guerrero,” or “indigenous attorneys,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to human rights defenders.

Under the “gender plus one” paradigm established in Cece, any of these groups could be additionally narrowed to “a woman who...” to form a clearly defined social group.²¹² Due to the political nature of this category, it is noted that these groups should be assessed under the protected ground of “political opinion,” in addition to being considered as a particular social group.²¹³

3 Indigenous Peoples

Indigenous leaders and defenders protesting the seizure and use of their territories and resources (farms, ranches, forest, fishing areas, and mines) have also been arbitrarily arrested, imprisoned, and assassinated at alarming rates.²¹⁴ Retaliation can be experienced by both immediate and extended family long after the original target has been killed.²¹⁵ At least 20% of the total population of Guerrero is indigenous,²¹⁶ comprising the Nahuas, Mixtecs, Amuzgos, and Tlapanecos.²¹⁷

The majority live in poverty, making them more susceptible to cartel recruitment and violence.²¹⁸ In January 2020, ten indigenous musicians in Chilapa, Guerrero, were murdered by members of the Los Ardillos cartel.²¹⁹ In May 2022, two leaders of the Guerrero-Emiliano Zapata Indigenous and Popular Council were murdered, allegedly by the same Los Ardillos group, in retaliation for organized protests and roadblocks.²²⁰ In the infamous case of Ayotzinapa, in 2014, student teachers from an indigenous rural college were intercepted by state authorities tied to criminal organizations.²²¹ Six students were killed in the clash and 43 students disappeared in the aftermath.²²²

Therefore, a particular social group could comprise “indigenous women,” or “indigenous women who have experienced gender-based violence,” or “indigenous leaders,” or “indigenous protestors,” or “indigenous students,” or more specifically, “indigenous community members whose lands/resources are threatened by criminal groups or state actors,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to indigenous persons.

For additional specificity, such groups could be limited to a particular indigenous community, speakers of a particular native language, or communities where the illegal activity is perpetrated by a particular criminal group like Los Ardillos. Due to the nature of this category, it is noted that these groups should be assessed under the protected ground of “race” in addition to being considered as a particular social group.²²³

4 Community Police

Former community police members are known to be subject to violence and other forms of persecution by state and non-state actors.²²⁴ Self-defense forces (policía comunitaria or autodefensas) have roots in Guerrero as early as the 1990s, and reemerged in 2013 as community members, indigenous communities in particular, sought a means to defend themselves against criminal groups who operated with little resistance from the government.²²⁵ Autodefensas are constitutionally recognized as an auxiliary police force through Guerrero State Law 701, which was introduced in 2011.²²⁶ Community police members often volunteer or are nominated to serve in rotation while maintaining their own occupation to sustain their family.²²⁷ At the height of their popularity with the people and local community assemblies, community police had a presence in 56 communities in ten municipalities of Guerrero.²²⁸ However, it did not take long for the national government to start arresting the leaders of these groups and using military forces to subdue their membership.²²⁹ As time has passed and continued government interference has weakened and fragmented the autodefensas, some of these community police forces have succumbed to the same corruption and collusion with organized criminal groups that faces the regular police and military.²³⁰ In their effort to combat the increasing violence perpetrated by the organized criminal groups, the Regional Coordinator of Community Authorities resorted to providing firearms and paramilitary training to children as young as six in 2020, and to a group of 20 boys and girls in January 2024.²³¹

In accord with established case law, a particular social group might be comprised of “members of a community police force,” or “former members of a community police force,” or “indigenous members of a community police force,” or more specifically “former members of a community police force who have directly engaged in resistance against an organized criminal group,” or “children recruited into and trained by a community police force,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to members of a community police force.

5 Politicians

Politicians face increased risk of violence, disappearance, and murder, particularly opposition candidates.²³² Because of collusion between incumbent government leaders and criminal groups, a new candidate can risk being murdered simply for running an advertisement or speaking against the candidate that is currently in power.²³³ During the 2017 electoral season, more than 136 candidates were killed and at least 400 other cases of threats, intimidation, and kidnapping were reported nationwide.²³⁴ In 2018, at least three dozen mayors, former mayors, and mayoral candidates in Guerrero were killed.²³⁵ This was among at least 93 politicians murdered that year nationwide, with Guerrero being the most violent state.²³⁶ Between September 2020 and June 2021, 36 candidates and 64 politicians were killed nationwide, with Guerrero ranked second among states for most political violence.²³⁷ In October 2022, the mayor of San Miguel Totolapan, Guerrero, and nineteen other government workers were murdered in a single massacre allegedly carried out by La Familia Michoacana.²³⁸ In December 2023, twelve town council members from Taxco, Guerrero, were kidnapped, and only four were returned alive.²³⁹ Municipal presidents have also been killed, and even federal senators are not safe.²⁴⁰

Therefore, a particular social group could comprise “politicians in the state of Guerrero,” or “former politicians in the state of Guerrero,” or more particularly “current and former politicians in opposition to the incumbent party,” or “candidate running against an incumbent politician in Guerrero,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to politicians and candidates. Due to the nature of this category, it is noted that these groups should be assessed under the protected ground of “political opinion” in addition to being considered as a particular social group.²⁴¹

6 Business owners, entrepreneurs, and tradespeople

Business owners, entrepreneurs, and tradespeople in Guerrero are forced to pay cuotas (regular taxes for “protection”) to the criminal groups to avoid violent retaliation.²⁴²

The criminal groups have taken control of the distribution of staples—chicken, beef, milk products, wheat, flour, beer, mescal, and soda, among others—to fix the prices and demand that business buy only from their suppliers.²⁴³ Even when a business complies with the cuotas, the criminal groups are known to continue to increase the amount owed until the fee can no longer be afforded.²⁴⁴ Businesses run by families with children are particularly targeted for this extortion.²⁴⁵ If even one cuota payment is missed, the criminal groups could kidnap the children and hold them for ransom.²⁴⁶ There is no guarantee that the children will be returned unharmed or alive even once the payment is fulfilled, and, even when they are, the family is subject to increased harassment afterward.²⁴⁷ Any missed cuota payments can result in the harassment, assault, or death of the business owner or their family members, including children.²⁴⁸ Further, once a business or community is perceived to be under the control of one particular criminal group, it is subject to increased retaliation and violence from rival criminal groups active in the region who are trying to gain control of that community.²⁴⁹

Therefore, particular social groups might comprise “business owners paying a cuota to a first criminal group in an area under threat from a second/additional criminal group(s),” or “business owners who have refused to pay a cuota or who can no longer afford to pay a cuota,” or “business owners with children who have refused to pay a cuota or who can no longer afford to pay a cuota,” or “business owners whose children or relatives have been kidnapped for ransom related to cuota payment,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to business owners. If needed for particularity, any of these suggested groups could be further narrowed based on a characteristic of specific goods or services, e.g., sellers of particular products.

7 Transportation workers

Taxi drivers, bus drivers, and others in the transportation industry are subject to targeted persecution in Guerrero.²⁵⁰ Public buses are often utilized by the gangs to smuggle drugs between communities.²⁵¹ Ongoing public threats by criminal organizations, as well as several recent murders of drivers and passengers alike, has led entire communities to shut down due to lack of security, threatening access to food and health services.²⁵² For instance, two murders occurred within hours of each other on February 13, 2024— Omar Reina Abarca, the leader of the Real de Oro Taxi Drivers Organization, was murdered in the city of Iguala, Guerrero, while another public transport driver was killed in Chilpancingo.²⁵³ The numerous rival gangs fight for control over transport between the larger population centers around the state, leaving drivers who transport goods or passengers between municipalities particularly vulnerable to attack.²⁵⁴ Drivers have been shot, and then left in the vehicle as it is set on fire.²⁵⁵ Others have been beheaded.²⁵⁶ These brutal killings are in addition to the cuotas that taxi drivers and bus drivers have to pay simply to conduct their normal business without retaliation.²⁵⁷

With this group, it is important to remember that “[i]t is an error...to assume that if a social group...has been found non-cognizable in one society, it will not be cognizable in any society....[D]ifferent local responses...in nations with distinct histories, populations, and government structures, may well result in a different social recognition of social groups.”²⁵⁸ In particular, the country conditions in Guerrero, Mexico, are notably different than those underlying the Acosta case.²⁵⁹ Due to the impoverished conditions and a lack of infrastructure, it is very difficult for anyone in Guerrero, much less taxi drivers or bus drivers, to find different employment.²⁶⁰ Even if it were feasible, it is likely the business would also be subject to cuotas and other coercion by the criminal groups due to their pervasive presence and almost universal control throughout the state.²⁶¹ Further, as demonstrated by the reports above, any noncompliance with cartel demands, either by failing to pay cuotas or by attempting to flee, is likely to result in the death of the transportation worker.

Therefore, a particular social group could comprise “transportation workers in Guerrero,” or more specifically “taxi drivers in Guerrero,” or “bus drivers in Guerrero,” or “transportation workers who have protested gang violence with roadblocks,” or “transportation workers who refuse to pay a cuota,” or “taxi drivers who have previously been kidnapped or subjected to violence by gang members,” or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to workers in the transportation industry.

8 Parents

Parents face distinct threats in Guerrero. In addition to the increased likelihood of business-related extortion and violence described above, the cartels in Guerrero actively attempt to recruit children into their ranks.²⁶² Parents of children who have resisted gang recruitment have previously been recognized as a social group under similar country conditions, and therefore should strongly be considered as a valid social group with respect to Guerrero, Mexico.²⁶³

forced into remote learning due to the ongoing gang violence pervasive in the state.²⁶⁴ The cartels in some communities are blocking teachers' access to the schools.²⁶⁵ Schools have also been closed because children were walking past dismembered bodies along the road, and the journey proved especially dangerous for female students.²⁶⁶ More particularly, indigenous students are disproportionately harmed due to low internet availability in their communities and the loss of meals normally provided by the schools.²⁶⁷ Disparate impact might also be experienced by students with disabilities, who were already underserved with only two percent of schoolteachers trained to teach such children and who attended school at a lower rate than students without disabilities.²⁶⁸

Therefore, a particular social group could comprise "students of Guerrero," or more specifically "students of Guerrero whose schools have been closed due to gang violence," or "female students of Guerrero whose schools have been closed due to gang violence," or "indigenous students required to participate in remote learning due to ongoing gang violence," or "students with disabilities required to participate in remote learning due to ongoing gang violence," or any permutation of those variables or other immutable characteristics that might pertain to students or young people.

Although it is noted that some courts have previously held certain student groups as non-cognizable, student groups are certainly not precluded per se.²⁶⁹ The groups proposed herein provide at least one additional narrowing characteristic that provide particularity and social distinction to clearly define the group.²⁷⁰

10 People who witness or report gang-related crime

People who have witnessed a gang murder, as well as their families, are at increased danger of extortion, blackmail, assault, disappearance, or murder.²⁷¹ According to our interviewee Sofia, when she refused to sell drugs for the murderers, they shot and forcefully disappeared her partner.²⁷² She stated that her niece was also murdered as a result, and she continued to receive threats against herself and her family until she fled.²⁷³ Therefore, a particular social group could comprise "persons who have witnessed a gang murder or serious crime," or "family members of a person who has witnessed a gang murder or serious crime," or more particularly "mothers who have witnessed a gang murder," or any permutation of those variables.

11 Migrants and asylum seekers

Migrants and asylum seekers are often targeted and victimized by criminal groups.²⁷⁴ They have been subject to extortion, threats, and kidnapping.²⁷⁵ Immigration checkpoints operated by soldiers and state agents have been ruled unconstitutional because they disproportionately affect indigenous and Afro-Mexican individuals.²⁷⁶ Criminal groups utilize social media and Internet hit lists to name asylum seekers, so that they can be tracked, threatened, and extorted in other states within Mexico as well as internationally.²⁷⁷ Therefore, a particular social group could comprise “forcibly displaced women from Guerrero,” or “indigenous or Afro-Mexican migrants who have been tracked at illegal checkpoints,” or more specifically “residents of Guerrero placed on an Internet hit list,” or “migrants from Guerrero who have been identified and threatened on social media by a criminal group,” or any permutation of those variables.

12 Afro-Mexicans

Afro-Mexicans comprise a higher percentage of the population in Guerrero than in any other state.²⁷⁸ Afro-Mexican women in particular are subjected to discrimination and systemic racial violence.²⁷⁹ Because they comprise such a small percentage of the overall state population, Afro-Mexicans could readily be considered distinct and particular to form a cognizable social group, as could Afro-Mexican women.²⁸⁰ It is further suggested that identification as an Afro-Mexican be considered as a cumulative immutable characteristic pertaining to any of the above defined groups, as illustrated under migrants and asylum seekers, if it is believed that doing so would result in sufficient social distinction and particularity. Further, due to the nature of this category, it is noted that Afro-Mexicans should be assessed under the protected ground of “race,” in addition to being considered as a particular social group as it pertains to systemic discrimination and violence.²⁸¹

D. CONCLUSION

The concept of a particular social group is central to asylum law, allowing individuals to seek protection based on their membership in a group with common, immutable characteristics. In Guerrero, there are numerous potential PSG, including but not limited to: indigenous and Afro-Mexican peoples, women, LGBTQ+ individuals, students, business owners, transportation workers, human rights defenders, journalists, political leaders, and other victims and witnesses of organized crime and state-sanctioned violence. Recognizing these groups is crucial for understanding the unique challenges faced by individuals in Guerrero and ensuring that they receive the full protection they are entitled to under international and US asylum law.

IV. Who are the perpetrators of this violence and crime?

Sixteen criminal organizations—La Familia Michoacana, Los Tlacos, and Los Ardillos among the most powerful—have terrorized the state of Guerrero. These cartels vie for power and territory, triggering explosions of violence throughout the state. The organizations have engaged in extorting, kidnapping, forced recruiting, and killing Guerrero residents in order to seize economic power in Guerrero, a strategic hub for drug trafficking in Mexico. In addition, State actors—including soldiers, police, and government officials—are responsible for human rights violations in Guerrero by actively taking part in killings and disappearances, colluding with criminal groups, and blocking accountability for their own abuses and the crimes of cartels.

A. FRAGMENTATION OF ORGANIZED CRIME IN MEXICO

Organized crime in Mexico is mutating, as smaller, localized organizations have been created after the breakup of larger groups.²⁸² The fragmentation of organized crime in Mexico has led to three notable changes: (1) leaders of larger regional/global cartels have been killed or detained, leading to local leaders.²⁸³ As the older cartels have fragmented, the smaller cartels that have come to replace them have greater adaptability, agility, and have become more violent.²⁸⁴ (2) The cartel fragmentation has also created circumstances for geographical expansion, resulting in intense rivalries that have emerged in the seeking of control of plazas.²⁸⁵ These smaller criminal groups have intensified violence across the state, using military-grade weapons and advanced communication systems.²⁸⁶ The weapons in the cartels' arsenal include anti-tank rockets, rocket and missile launchers, fragmentation grenades, and a wide variety of automatic and semi-automatic weapons.²⁸⁷ (3) Finally, this fragmentation and diversification of the various criminal groups has led to an increased presence of cartel activities in the everyday lives of Mexicans.²⁸⁸ Cartels seeking greater profit and expansions have turned increasingly to activities of extortion, kidnapping, homicide, and theft.²⁸⁹ Furthermore, the ability of criminal organizations to recruit new members has become easier, due to widespread impunity and corruption.²⁹⁰

Most residents are vulnerable to violence, and the growing levels of poverty and inequality make it easy for cartel organizations to recruit or force locals into their ranks.²⁹¹

Additionally, the effect of the breaking up of larger cartels into smaller groups means there is less information and records available about them, as they suffer constant divisions in their membership.²⁹² The groups' leaders reduced exposure to media gives them more ability to control local populations with impunity.²⁹³ Moreover, cartel groups mask their goals of power and control through what are known as "narco mantras."²⁹⁴ Narco mantras are open messages on websites or in public settings that falsely claim their mission is "to clean the place of crime," when in reality the cartels are simply trying to drive out their rivals.²⁹⁵ The groups then direct their violence to rival gangs and to local residents, whom the cartel presumes are allied with their rivals.²⁹⁶

B. CARTEL PRESENCE IN GUERRERO

Similar to many other parts of Mexico, Guerrero has seen a transition from a larger, centrally-controlled cartel to a number of criminal groups all vying for power.²⁹⁷ Before 2009, Guerrero was predominantly controlled by the Beltran Leyva Cartel, led by Beltran Leyva, alias El Barbas.²⁹⁸ Beltran Leyva was killed in 2009 which led to a war among approximately 18 other criminal groups for the control of the territories.²⁹⁹ In 2018 there were reportedly 18 groups operating in Guerrero: El Cartel del Sur, El Comando Suicida, Los Rojos, Los Ardillos, Gente Nueva, La Familia Michoacana (LFM), Guerreros Unidos, El Cártel Independiente de Acapulco (Cida), Los Beltran Leyva, Los Añorve, Los Carrillo, Los Marín, El Cartel Jalisco Nueva Generación (CJNG), Los Tequileros, Los Granados, Caballeros Templarios, Guardia Guerrerense y Sangre Nueva Guerrerense.³⁰⁰ In 2021, Los Tlacos emerged following the expulsion of Cartel Del Sur during a confrontation between that criminal group and a community police force in the mountains.³⁰¹ There was also a division in Guerreros Unidos (GU) after members were detained for the disappearance of the 43 Ayotzinapa students.³⁰² When some members of GU were released, there was a split into a group called La Bandera, while the other part of GU remained intact and allied itself with Los Tlacos.³⁰³

Currently, at least 16 criminal groups operate in Guerrero, controlling territory for the exploitation of natural resources, distributing of drugs and other commodities, and extorting many residents, most notably through the collection of cuotas.³⁰⁴ These criminal groups are the source of the extreme surge in violence in Guerrero as the various groups fight for control of territory across all 84 municipalities.³⁰⁵ The state of Guerrero plays a strategic role for these organized crime groups because it has historically been a hub for marijuana and poppy cultivation and distribution, and has now become an epicenter for coca, a primary ingredient in cocaine.³⁰⁶ Additionally, Guerrero is a key transit point for drug shipments traveling north to the United States, with the Port of Acapulco acting as a hub for receiving cocaine shipments from South America.³⁰⁷ Maps A and B, below, illustrate the extensive cartel presence in Guerrero and its strategic importance in drug trafficking.³⁰⁸ Guerrero is home to or situated in close proximity to four of the eight narcotics points of entry into Mexico.³⁰⁹ Map B also shows Guerrero's close proximity to Mexico City and Guadalajara, cities of significant narcotics concentration; drug trafficking flows from the ports of entry directly through Guerrero towards the cities of narcotics concentration.³¹⁰

The goal of these criminal organizations is to control territory, transportation routes and the residents themselves of those regions.³¹¹ The most common form of control is through the cuota.³¹² As explained previously, cuotas must be paid to the criminal groups in exchange for “protection.”³¹³ The more territories and businesses they are able to infiltrate, the greater the profit.³¹⁴ Thus, it is not only a matter of territorial expansion, but also a control of commerce and communities, all achieved through violence and fear.³¹⁵

Map A indicates the current criminal groups in Guerrero according to the Mexican government.³¹⁶ According to this source, three cartels have expanded their control most significantly: La Familia Michoacana, Los Tlacos, and Los Ardillos.³¹⁷ These dominant groups each have strongholds in three regions: La Familia Michoacana has a presence in Tierra Caliente, the northern zone, and Costa Grande.³¹⁸ Los Tlacos operate in the central region, the northern zone, and La Montana.³¹⁹ And Los Ardillos are found across the central region, la Montana, and la Costa Chica.³²⁰ Other groups responsible for violence in Guerrero include the Jalisco Cartel New Generation (CJNG), Guerreros Unidos, Los Viagras, Los Rojos, and Los Tequileros.³²¹

Ongoing clashes between groups vying for expansion leads to significant violence in Guerrero.³²² Referring to the map in the appendix, the key disputes by region include:

- Northern zone (Norte): between Los Tlacos, La Bandera, and La Familia Michoacana.
- Tierra Caliente: between La Familia, CJNG, and Los Tequileros.

The expansion into other territories not only creates conflicts with the other criminal organizations, but also with community defense forces.³²⁴ Once criminal groups have infiltrated a community, they attempt to make the community entirely dependent on them, controlling entry and exit into the territory, seizing all of the land and controlling every aspect of commercial activity.³²⁵ Residents are unable to leave their area freely as the criminal groups use checkpoints to determine who comes and goes.³²⁶ The criminal groups inform community members they can no longer buy products from others, but must go through the criminal group's suppliers.³²⁷ For example, residents have been told they can only purchase mezcal from businesses approved by the dominant criminal cartel.³²⁸ The goal of these groups is to dominate every aspect of community life, including forcefully recruiting males into their ranks.³²⁹ Men who refuse are detained and can be killed.³³⁰ Further, when a cartel takes over a new territory, the residents are then considered to have an obligation to be part of the group; any dissenters are assumed to belong to rival groups and may be killed.³³¹ Many of these groups have national networks across Mexico.³³²

Criminal organizations often threaten the heads of families and the owners of businesses.³³³ Further, they may address threats to whole communities, if the criminal organization perceives resistance.³³⁴ If the criminal organization is targeting a specific person, it may send a representative to that person's house to explain the violent consequences of not making payments or otherwise complying with instructions.³³⁵ If the cartel targets a family, it may send pictures of family members to the head of the family, and threaten harm or kidnapping if they do not comply.³³⁶ When criminal organizations threaten the entire community, they will post flyers and signs, or even leave mutilated bodies, among other means, to convey their messages.³³⁷ control politics, direct public transportation routes, and instill widespread fear through practices of extortion, kidnapping and public displays of brutal violence.

1 Cartel Jalisco Nueva Generación (CJNG)

CJNG is currently the fastest-growing cartel in Mexico, and is one of the biggest transporters of methamphetamine and fentanyl in the world.³³⁸ The cartel profits through narcotics trafficking as well as extortion, selling weapons, stealing gasoline, and kidnapping.³³⁹ To expand its power and control, CJNG infiltrates local defense militias, recruiting them into the cartel and arming them to fight against their rivals.³⁴⁰ In 2019, Insight Crime named CJNG a “criminal winner” based on its territorial presence, its income from drug trafficking, its control of port infrastructure, and its success in laundering money.³⁴¹

CJNG boasts a significant presence in the state of Guerrero and has engaged in extortion and kidnapping practices in their attempts to control transportation routes.³⁴² Nicolás, our interviewee described how he was kidnapped during his normal route selling fish between his town of Maraquelia and Acapulco.³⁴³ Two pickup trucks drove in front of him and two followed him, forcing him to stop.³⁴⁴ Armed men forced Nicolás out of his car and hit him in the head with a shotgun.³⁴⁵ They told him he owed a debt of 9,000 pesos to CJNG, the group to whom he usually paid cuotas.³⁴⁶ The men abducted Nicolás and forced him to pay a ransom fee in exchange for his freedom.³⁴⁷ The men were dressed like soldiers with dark green uniforms and heavy weapons, but wore face masks to conceal themselves.³⁴⁸

2 Nueva Familia Michoacana, also known as La Familia Michoacana

Originally contained in the state of Michoacán, they have expanded their territorial control, especially in Guerrero, engaging in drug trafficking, extortion, and kidnapping.³⁴⁹ This group engages in the use of fear tactics known as narco mantras, which are public messages to terrorize and subjugate the public with disturbing imagery, such as dumping five heads on a nightclub dancefloor to announce their power.³⁵⁰ In 2020, Insight Crime found La Familia Michoacana to be one of the most active groups in Guerrero.³⁵¹

In 2023, residents of at least 30 towns in San Miguel Totolapan in Guerrero created a community police force to defend their homes from criminal groups.³⁵² The force, known as “Pueblos Unidos de San Miguel Totolapan,” have stated that they do not trust state police for protection and must rely on themselves.³⁵³ They denounce La Familia Michoacana, led by Jose Alfredo, “El Fresa,” and Johnny Hurtado Olascoaga, “El Pez,” because of their use of extortion and their attempts to control economic activity.³⁵⁴ This community police force was likely a response, in part, to a shocking attack in San Miguel Totolapan on October 5, 2022. 20 staff members at city hall, including the mayor and other city leaders, were all killed when an armed group opened fire.³⁵⁵ According to data from the Mexican consulting firm Etellekt Consultores, 60 local officials including 18 mayors have been assassinated since President Andres Manuel Lopez Obrador took office in 2018.³⁵⁶ The attack on city hall was attributed to the ongoing rivalry between Los Tequileros and La Familia Michoacana.³⁵⁷

Additionally, La Familia Michoacana has been involved in the clashes over public transportation in the city of Taxco in Guerrero.³⁵⁸ In January of 2024 bus and taxi drivers suspended their services in Taxco because of lack of security after one of their colleagues was murdered.³⁵⁹ Organized crime has terrorized the city of Taxco in Guerrero with threats directed against the public by criminal organizations La Familia Michoacana and Los Tlacos.³⁶⁰ In December of 2023 an armed commando group kidnapped twelve town councilmembers, only four of whom have been returned alive; the location of the others remain unknown.³⁶¹

Finally, the violence and destruction caused by La Familia Michoacana also extends to drone warfare. La Familia Michoacana is equipped with sophisticated drones, armored trucks with tactical weapons, bulletproof vests, and military uniforms.³⁶² An investigative journalist from Michoacan stated, “the use of drones is a tactic adopted from the CJNG, who provide La Familia Michoacana with increasingly sophisticated and quieter drones to carry out explosive attacks.”³⁶³ CJNG has reportedly been known to utilize drone strikes to forcibly displace residents from key trafficking routes, and a recent alliance between CJNG and La Familia Michoacana has resulted in increased usage of drones.³⁶⁴ In early May of 2023, multiple drone attacks destroyed homes and forced the displacement of 600 residents from the town of Nuevo Poblado el Caracol in Guerrero; residents blamed the attack on La Familia Michoacana.³⁶⁵ In January of 2024, the State Attorney General’s office confirmed drone attacks in the town of Heliodoro Castillo, due to a confrontation between La Familia Michoacana and Los Tlacos.³⁶⁶ One of the recovered drones, with a value of nearly $20,000, contained a targeting system that detects humans through body temperature.³⁶⁷ Employing drone attacks to displace residents has occurred across Guerrero, also in towns bordering the Ayotac River, which is a route of strategic importance.³⁶⁸ We interviewed Emilia, who survived a drone attack that destroyed her town of Las Balsas, Guerrero, and killed her husband.³⁶⁹ She explained that, ten years ago, the community police force ran La Familia Michoacana out of town with machetes and guns; however, the community forces are no longer a match for the cartels and their heat-seeking, unmanned drones of

3 Los Ardillos and Los Tlacos

Similarly to La Familia Michoacana, Los Ardillos have been actively seeking to control travel routes and public transportation.³⁷¹ In February of 2024, four bus drivers and two taxi drivers were caught in the crossfire in the midst of the ongoing fight between Los Tlacos and Los Ardillos in Chilpancingo.³⁷² Wars over transport also occur in Acapulco, Taxco, and Iguala, as the criminal groups seek to control transport routes across municipalities.³⁷³ Los Tlacos have another battle for territory and transportation routes with La Familia Michoacana in the central mountainous region of the state, as well as in Iguala and Taxco.³⁷⁴

The strength of Los Ardillos in the capital city of Chilpancingo has certainly been confirmed through a meeting between the cartel leader, Celso Ortego Jiménez, and the mayor of Chilpancingo, Norma Otilia Hernandez.³⁷⁵ Shortly after this breakfast meeting, the bodies and decapitated heads of five men and two women were found in the city center with messages stating, “Greetings Norma Otilia, I’m still waiting for the second breakfast that you promised me after you went looking for me. With affection, your friend.”³⁷⁶

riots occurring in the capital city after alleged Los Ardillos members were indicted for drug and weapons charges.³⁷⁷ Thousands of protestors, angered by the jailing of the two cartel members, set upon Chilpancingo in July 2023.³⁷⁸ The indictment of these two individuals triggered a large protest; it was estimated that 2,000 to 5,000 residents of communities controlled by Los Ardillos swarmed the capital city.³⁷⁹ The demonstrators commandeered an armored security vehicle from state police, and rammed it through the gates in front of the state legislature building, as panicked government workers fled.³⁸⁰ Officials stated that many protestors were likely forced to take part in the demonstration due to fear of Los Ardillos in their communities.³⁸¹

Additionally, like many of the other criminal groups in Guerrero, Los Ardillos have engaged in extortionist practices. For example, Natalia owned a bakery in Tepecoacuilco de Trujano; she explained to us that she was forced to pay monthly cuotas to the criminal group Tumbo in order to continue operating her bakery.³⁸² This group is affiliated with Los Ardillos and wears green military-like uniforms.³⁸³ These smaller criminal groups, like Tumbo in Tierra Caliente, are affiliated and are collaborating with Los Ardillos.³⁸⁴

We also spoke with Mateo, who attempted to run for public office in Acatape; however, his candidacy was stopped by threats from Los Ardillos.³⁸⁵ The incumbent official was linked with Los Ardillos.³⁸⁶ When Los Ardillos discovered that Mateo wanted to run for office, they detained him at a checkpoint and threatened that “something bad would happen to him” if he did not stop criticizing the corruption in town government.³⁸⁷ Mateo was fairly certain these individuals were associated with Los Ardillos, given that they control the checkpoints in the town, they were wearing police uniforms, were driving a Chevrolet Silverado, and were carrying guns.³⁸⁸ He believed the current political leaders provided Los Ardillos with these uniforms so that they could conceal their identities.³⁸⁹

In response to cartel violence in Guerrero and lack of government protection, citizen mobilization into self-defense groups has become commonplace.³⁹⁰ While initially recognized as legitimate auxiliary security forces by local government, these self-defense groups have changed over time.³⁹¹ Some groups have been infiltrated by the cartels named above, impacted by the same forces of corruption and manipulation faced by the military and regular police in the region.³⁹² According to Mike Vigil, a former US DEA chief of international operations, the self-defense groups “started to see that there was a lot of profit to be made if they started to engage in criminal acts” and criminal organizations “started to penetrate them because ... they could use them to expand their territory and push [other] cartels out of the area.”³⁹³

The ties between various criminal groups, government forces, and community police forces allows perpetrators to enjoy impunity when committing violent acts in the name of public security.³⁹⁴ According to José Miguel Vivanco, formerly of Human Rights Watch, many of these groups, “after a short amount of time end up corrupted... The phenomenon of self-defense groups is a clear demonstration of the failure of the State to guarantee security in various communities throughout the nation.”³⁹⁵

D. INVOLVEMENT OF STATE ACTORS

State actors—including military, National Guard, municipal and state police, and local and federal government officials—are also responsible for human rights violations in Guerrero by actively taking part in killings and disappearances, providing criminal groups with arms and training, retaliating against individuals who report crimes, and fostering impunity, among other actions and omissions.³⁹⁶

National security forces are known to collaborate with criminal groups throughout Mexico, including those operating in the state of Guerrero, by providing them with arms and direct assistance.³⁹⁷ The army has sold weapons to criminal groups and trained their members, enabling the cartels to take control of smuggling routes and large regions of the state.³⁹⁸ For example, the Army helped La Familia Michoacana take over the town of

Las Balsas, Guerrero, after the citizens fought back.³⁹⁹ An Army commander disarmed the townspeople and misled their defense efforts, providing a safe route for LFM to enter and depart from the town.⁴⁰⁰ Soldiers and members of the National Guard are also known to idly observe while citizens are murdered, sometimes even escorting the criminals.⁴⁰¹

The state's involvement extends to actively perpetrating violence and violating the human rights of Guerrero residents. In the notorious case from Iguala, 43 students from the Ayotzinapa Rural Teachers' College were forcibly disappeared in 2014.⁴⁰² The Interdisciplinary Group of Independent Experts (GIEI) reported collusion between military commanders of the 27th and 41st Infantry Battalions with the criminal group Guerreros Unidos.⁴⁰³ The collusion was evidenced by information gathered on wiretaps relating to talk of payments and relationships with various soldiers.⁴⁰⁴ Following an investigation, the Undersecretary for Human Rights released a report confirming that the disappearances were "state" crimes.⁴⁰⁵ The report found various local, state, and federal officials – by commission or omission – were involved in carrying out or covering up the crimes of Ayotzinapa.⁴⁰⁶ A separate case in Nuevo Laredo, Tamaulipas, led to the arrest of 30 marines in April 2021; they were charged with the forced disappearances of up to 40 citizens, including at least five children.⁴⁰⁷ In July 2021, the head of the human rights unit of the Secretariat of the Navy apologized to the families of the victims, marking the first time the armed forces apologized for committing forced disappearances.⁴⁰⁸

From 2007 through July 2023, the army was responsible for the deaths of 5,488 civilians.⁴⁰⁹ These killings are rarely followed with independent investigations.⁴¹⁰ In 2022, the National Human Rights Commission received 1,005 complaints against the Army and National Guard, the highest number in nine years.⁴¹¹ These complaints frequently relate to forced disappearance, cruel and inhumane treatment, arbitrary detention, and extortion.⁴¹² The increasingly militaristic approach to public safety in Mexico will only serve to increase violence and worsen human rights conditions in Guerrero and throughout the country.⁴¹³ Mexican soldiers will often become law enforcement officers after leaving the military.⁴¹⁴ The majority are never certified to serve as local or federal police officials.⁴¹⁵ In Guerrero, only 8.3 percent of officers are deemed fit for duty through official certification.⁴¹⁶ Thus, the corruption and serious deficiencies found in the military will continue at the state and local levels of law enforcement.

Political leaders seek support from cartels in their campaigns and grant them contracts to build roads and schools.⁴¹⁷ Further, when residents report cartel crimes to the authorities, the authorities often retaliate against those brave enough to come forward. We spoke with the Hernández family, who had suffered an assault. Two days after filing a complaint with the police, a patrol arrived at the Hernández family’s home; an officer informed them that his supervisor wanted to meet with them.⁴¹⁸ The officer stated that his boss was the president of the municipality and that they should meet him on Saturday behind the town landfill.⁴¹⁹ After making inquiries, the Hernández family confirmed that the politician was controlled by the cartel.⁴²⁰ Other residents of Guerrero also confirm that the authorities are working with the criminal groups. Jimena recounted to us how her mother was threatened the day after reporting crimes to the police.⁴²¹

Residents have also described situations where law enforcement officials have been present while people were murdered. Santiago stated that a witness who was present when their two sons were murdered told them that police actually escorted the criminals as they left the crime scene.⁴²² Another resident from his town spoke of a tragedy some years earlier; the resident’s husband took photographs showing police officers at the scene during the commission of multiple homicides.⁴²³ These accounts all confirm a sustained collusion between law enforcement, military and criminal organizations in Guerrero.

V. Federal and state government officials are unwilling or unable to protect Guerrero residents

Government officials in Guerrero have shown they are unwilling or unable to protect victims of violence.⁴²⁴ Commentators inside and outside of Mexico have referred to Guerrero as a failed state in the hands of criminal organizations.⁴²⁵ Cartels have infiltrated each level of government, blurring the line between criminal and state actors.⁴²⁶ The people of Guerrero do not trust the government to be independent of the cartels or to guarantee their safety.

A. INFILTRATION

The people of Guerrero cannot trust the government to be independent of the cartels. There is a well-established tradition of collusion between government officials and criminal organizations, as already discussed in this report.⁴²⁷ For example, on July 5, 2023, the mayor of Chilpancingo had breakfast with the head of Los Ardillos.⁴²⁸ The state leader of the political party to which the mayor belonged came out in support of the meeting.⁴²⁹ Yet rival political leaders have condemned the links between organized crime and elected officials, declaring “The one who should think about leaving the government is the governor... It is clear that she does not govern; organized crime governs.”⁴³⁰ The PAN leader, Marko Cortes, similarly asserted that government officials in Guerrero have submitted to criminal organizations.⁴³¹

The infiltration between the government and the criminal organizations extends beyond the political leaders. In Guerrero, there has been a systematic infiltration by the cartels into military, police, and even community self-defense forces.⁴³² In March 2024, an organized criminal group, in view of witnesses, killed about thirty people, dismembered them, and put them in their trucks.⁴³³ Afterward, the National Guard showed up, but they did nothing to either apprehend those responsible or clear the scene.⁴³⁴ They simply drove through the town and then left the community. Senator Nestora Salgado has raised the concerns of her constituents to the Secretary of State and the governor of Guerrero, but neither has accepted her invitation.⁴³⁵ “It does not matter what we, those of us who are trying to fight [organized crime], do; they are very infiltrated in our governmental systems.”⁴³⁶ The infiltration is everywhere. The Senator stated that more municipal presidents, congresspeople, district and municipal representatives, and law enforcement officials are colluding with the cartels than those who are not doing so.

The infiltration has extended to local security forces. According to our interview with Sofía, once a report is made to the police or the prosecutor’s office, criminal organizations are frequently made aware of who made the report and the contents of the account.⁴³⁷ Community members who file reports often must flee or face the retaliation of the cartels; sometimes the police themselves—far beyond simply ignoring the complaints—will threaten and attack the residents who report crimes.⁴³⁸ For example, after Nicolás was kidnapped and had his truck and wallet stolen, he reported the crimes to the local prosecutor’s office; then, someone in the prosecutor’s office alerted the criminal organization of his report.⁴³⁹ Shortly thereafter, the criminal organization killed a member of Nicolás’s family and threatened his life.⁴⁴⁰

State security forces have actively participated in the violence against the residents of Guerrero. Guerreros Unidos, as mentioned above, worked with state forces to forcefully disappear the 43 students from Ayotzinapa.⁴⁴¹ The chief prosecutor on the case investigated the records and told a reporter this was “objective and resounding proof tying an authority of the state to organized crime.”⁴⁴² Ángela María Buitrago, an international investigator, visited the Ayotzinapa campus after the forced disappearances and noted that every parent she met asked her to tell them the truth, not to lie, and not to “sell out.”⁴⁴³ Buitrago reflected that this was the “ultimate expression of a citizenry that no longer believed in anything at all.” The officials are not trusted to conduct serious criminal investigations or to speak out against injustice.⁴⁴⁴

The criminal organizations have also infiltrated state functions, including public transportation, land management, and control of state capitals. There is an alarming increase in violence facing taxi drivers. The taxi drivers, whether they refuse to pay cuotas or not, risk retaliation from the cartels.⁴⁴⁵ For example, on April 14, 2024, three attacks on buses and taxis occurred in Chilpancingo in less than 3 days, resulting in three vehicles set on fire, deaths and injuries.

Control of large areas of land has been ceded to criminal groups. Journalists have reported on deals between the current national government and criminal groups.⁴⁴⁶ In February 2023, the President of the National Defense Commission of the Chamber of Deputies, Ricardo Villarreal, urged the federal government to act in Guerrero. He insisted that because organized crime groups seek to take over territories through the use of violence, President Obrador’s policy of “hugs, not bullets” will not work, and the Mexican State has to fight the group’s expansion.⁴⁴⁷ The PAN deputy, Jorge Triana, stated that in Guerrero, there is an absence of not only governability but also of government.⁴⁴⁸ The Bishop Emeritus of Chilpancingo-Chilapa, Salvador Rangel Mendoza, has declared that the state capital is under the power of organized criminal gangs.⁴⁴⁹ This view was further supported after seven dismembered bodies were found in the streets of downtown Chilpancingo.⁴⁵⁰

B. LACK OF SECURITY

State protection is a very scarce commodity in Guerrero. Guerrero’s federal and state officials have broken the trust of the people they serve by failing to provide security and maintain peace in their communities. Some government officials have done this by abandoning their positions. For example, the head of the Guerrero State Attorney General’s Office, Sandra Luz Valdovinos Salmerón, requested a six-month unpaid leave of absence “to attend to personal matters.”⁴⁵¹ Her separation came just as Guerrero faced a surge in violent crime from groups such as La Familia Michoacana and the Sinaloa Cartel.⁴⁵²

Some officials have intentionally limited the public’s access to them. It is common to pass by a precinct or a municipal department and see police inside, but the doors will be locked.⁴⁵³ The police often stop patrolling many communities at 4:00 p.m. In an interview, Senator Salgado expressed her deep frustration with this practice:

[This] doesn’t make sense; in the night is when crimes happen, and they are all inside doing whatever they do. Who, then, is supposed to be restoring order and peace? They do show up when they hear about the deaths, but again, that is only after someone is killed. The communities are left without any government or authority to protect them.⁴⁵⁴

The Senator receives National Guard security but with strict limits on where she can travel under their protection. Senator Salgado's hometown is outside of the National Guard's protection. In this way, even as a Senator, she is not guaranteed security by the government.⁴⁵⁵

Because the people of Guerrero do not trust state officials to provide them security, communities have pursued options independent of the government. As discussed above, in response to the growing presence of criminal groups, many communities created Community Police Forces.⁴⁵⁶ Such forces attempted to defend communities and to combat extortion and kidnapping, all of which local governments were not addressing.⁴⁵⁷ A member of the community police in Ayutla De Los Libres, Felipe Ramirez,⁴⁵⁸ explained to reporters, "The only thing we ask of the government is to leave us alone. If they can't control the security of our people, of our state, of our region, let us."⁴⁵⁹

In the absence of state security, Catholic priests have sought peace for communities.⁴⁶⁰ Bishops in Guerrero have met with leaders of cartels such as La Familia Michoacana to broker peace agreements and have encouraged government officials to participate in the discussions. The Bishop of the Diocese of Chilpancingo-Chilapa, José de Jesús González Hernández, stated that the more than 156,000 murders over six years and the nearly 111,000 cases of disappeared persons show that the current security strategies have failed. However, even members of the clergy are not immune from cartel violence. On June 20, 2022, members of a criminal group killed two Jesuit priests and a tour guide in Cerocahui, Chihuahua, after the priests tried to provide first aid to the tour guide, whom the cartel members had pursued into a church.⁴⁶¹

C. IMPUNITY

The justice system regularly fails to provide accountability for violent crimes and human rights violations in Mexico. About 90 percent of crimes are never even reported, and one-third of reported crimes are never investigated; in total, authorities "resolved" only one percent of all crimes committed in 2022.⁴⁶² In 2022, the Instituto Nacional de Estadística y Geografía (INEGI, or National Institute of Statistics and Geography) reported that the Judicial Branch received 5,420 complaints about public servants failing to fulfill their duties.⁴⁶³

In 2014, Guerrero had the highest homicide rate reported in Mexico, which reached 48 homicides per 100,000 inhabitants, according to federal government figures. This figure is three times higher than the national average (16/100,000). Guerrero's homicide rate is more than seven times higher than the global average (6.2). As mentioned, the number of reported crimes is actually far lower than the real figure, largely due to impunity for perpetrators and victims' fear of reprisals.⁴⁶⁴

In Guerrero, the high rates of impunity are notorious. Sandra Luz Valdovinos Salmerón, the Attorney General of the State of Guerrero, has been accused of having an "impunity agreement" with the Sinaloa cartel.⁴⁶⁵ In the infamous case of the 43 missing students of Iguala, Guerrero, the Secretary of National Defense, Salvador Cienfuegos, refused to let investigators question the soldiers involved, publicly stating, "I will not permit soldiers to be treated like criminals."⁴⁶⁶

High impunity rates place those who oppose violent cartels and government corruption in grave danger. After the murder of yet another journalist in Guerrero, Nelson Matus, efforts to combat impunity for killing journalists were demanded.⁴⁶⁷ The Secretary General of the National Union of Press Editors, Abel Miranda, called for the Attorney General's Office to investigate the aggressions against journalists:

impunity is like an invitation to commit more crimes under the posture that they can murder, and nothing will happen... [the state has made] silenced areas in which journalistic activity cannot be exercised due to threats from organized crime, which acts in close coordination with authorities of the three levels of government.⁴⁶⁸

The lack of accountability will allow these serious crimes to continue unabated in Guerrero.⁴⁶⁹

Because high rates of impunity are well known in Guerrero, the number of people who risk reporting crimes to local authorities is disproportionately low, despite the high volume of violent acts committed in the state.⁴⁷⁰ Authorities routinely do very little to help crime victims.⁴⁷¹ We spoke to several Guerrero refugees who attempted to request the assistance of political leaders, to no avail.

Even the rare cases that produce investigations are later dismissed by prosecutors who claim a lack of evidence.⁴⁷² Several interview accounts, including those from Gabriel,

Emilio, Julieta, and Senator Salgado, indicate that police may visit homicide scenes only to collect the body and temporarily seal the area.⁴⁷³ According to Santiago, the police routinely discount victims' stories and ask them to leave before "someone gets killed."⁴⁷⁴ In fact, beyond failing to investigate, law enforcement in Guerrero will actually threaten or actively work with cartels to silence crime victims.⁴⁷⁵ For example, after Camila reported her concerns to the police that a cartel was invading her mountain community and wanted to steal her home, two of her children were kidnapped, beaten, and dropped off at the police station.⁴⁷⁶ The police called Camila to retrieve her children, but took no steps to apprehend the men who had kidnapped them.⁴⁷⁷ In another example, Nicolás was kidnapped and had his truck and wallet stolen; later, he went to the prosecutor's office to report the crimes, but a staff member alerted a criminal organization of his efforts. Later, the criminal group killed his family member and threatened his life.⁴⁷⁸

VI. Why Guerrero refugees cannot safely relocate within Mexico

A. THE NATIONAL REACH OF CARTELS AND ORGANIZED CRIME GROUPS

The national reach of cartels and organized crime in Mexico is well documented.⁴⁷⁹ When Guerrero residents seek safety in other parts of the country, the strategy often proves ineffective, as criminal organizations have strong ties across Mexico.⁴⁸⁰ Criminal groups have extensive networks that are capable of conducting targeted killings even in areas controlled by rival organizations.⁴⁸¹ Through various methods, cartels constantly monitor and track the flow of people in and out of their territories.⁴⁸²

Cartels are known by Guerrero residents to operate in multiple regions. Emilio and Julieta explained to us that a specific cartel operating in Guerrero has presence in different states, including Chihuahua and Sinaloa along the U.S. border.⁴⁸³ La Familia Michoacana is said to have many regions under their control.⁴⁸⁴ Numerous refugees, like Elías, believe that leaving their town to go to another state in Mexico would not be any different for them than staying in Guerrero.⁴⁸⁵ Various criminal groups are known to have a power and alliances in across the country.⁴⁸⁶

We interviewed many individuals who fled Guerrero and then were pursued by criminal groups in other areas. Nicolás, who had been kidnapped and beaten by members of a criminal group, was able to escape and relocate to the neighboring state of Oaxaca.⁴⁸⁷ He then moved a second time, to the city of Monterrey, each time careful not to tell anyone where he was hiding for fear of being targeted again.⁴⁸⁸ While walking home from work one day, Nicolás was stopped by a police patrol.⁴⁸⁹ The officials checked his identification and took his money.⁴⁹⁰ Shortly thereafter, the cartel went to his house looking for him; fortunately, Nicolás was not at home, and then left Monterrey as soon as possible.⁴⁹¹

due to the constant violence.⁴⁹² Her father had been threatened and pressured to work for the cartel, so they went into hiding.⁴⁹³ Later, Jimena's husband was kidnapped and beaten, to obligate him to join the cartel.⁴⁹⁴ Jimena told us, "they knew what school my son was attending and even described what my son looked like."⁴⁹⁵ The harassment continued, forcing them to flee Guerrero.⁴⁹⁶

Lucía and her partner were interviewed at a shelter along their journey to the US; the interview was videorecorded.⁴⁹⁷ The couple covered their faces with masks in attempts to hide their identity.⁴⁹⁸ Nevertheless, later in the journey, they were contacted by a criminal group: the text message stated, "it doesn't matter where you are, we will find you because you ran away."⁴⁹⁹

David and Emilia emphasized to us the long reach of La Familia Michoacana's network.⁵⁰⁰ They did not feel safe in Mexico City, learning of various instances of cartel pursuit. They recounted that a family of three was also killed after fleeing Guerrero for Cancun: the criminal organizations "would make sure that no one gets out alive."⁵⁰¹ Similarly, Andrea and Fernanda stressed to us that cartels "are all connected somehow; it sounds bad, but it is the truth."⁵⁰²

Another former Guerrero resident, Mateo, left his town because he did not feel safe.⁵⁰³ While in Mexico City, studying for his master's degree, he was told that people were looking for him.⁵⁰⁴ Later, someone called him from a public telephone and threatened him; although they did not identify themselves, he believed they were Los Ardillos.⁵⁰⁵ Victoria relocated to Jalisco for some time but was harassed by cartels.⁵⁰⁶ Camila moved to Sonora but was the victim of an attempted kidnapping, so she fled to the U.S. border⁵⁰⁷

The Hernández family, originally from Oaxaca, moved to Guerrero after two family members were killed.⁵⁰⁸ Later, they moved to Puebla and lived there for some time.⁵⁰⁹ Each time they moved, the criminal group found them; even when they changed their phone number, the cartel was still able to still threaten them by text.⁵¹⁰ Another interviewee, Elena, moved from Chilpancingo to Acapulco, and later to Sonora, but each time received threatening text messages that the cartel was following her.⁵¹¹

In fact, cartels will pursue their targets all the way to the US-Mexico border.⁵¹²

B. METHODS USED BY CARTELS TO LOCATE THEIR TARGETS NATIONWIDE

Cartels use a variety of methods to locate and target and locate fleeing Guerrero residents, including checkpoints and intelligence networks.⁵¹⁴ The checkpoints are often managed by government officials, but some are directly run by organized criminal groups.⁵¹⁵ In any case, many of these officials are corrupted by cartels, and share information with them, including access to government databases.⁵¹⁶ As a result, migrants will attempt to avoid these checkpoints and try not to reveal their true identities when stopped.⁵¹⁷

Publicly-available information and government databases are readily monitored by cartels. Individuals have to record their current address in a public registry to work legally, making this information easily accessible to cartels.⁵¹⁸ Mexican lawyers specializing in information access have shown that victims are unable to safely relocate to other areas of Mexico because public registries and other personal information are easily accessible on the Internet.⁵¹⁹

Cartels also use voter registration information to locate individuals.⁵²⁰ As Elena recounted regarding her experience with La Familia Michoacana: “one of my cousins told me that...La Familia Michoacana was looking for me and that they had a list with my name and a photo of my voter ID.”⁵²¹ Gabriel, a taxi driver, reported to us that he must file papers for his licensing, which makes it very easy for criminal groups to locate him.⁵²² He remembered four of five of his colleagues who were harassed and killed by the cartels.⁵²³

In addition, some corrupt Mexican officials have helped cartels obtain “state-of-the-art spyware.”⁵²⁴ Pegasus, one of the most potent applications, can infect cellphones without any sign of intrusion and extract every email, text message, photo, and calendar appointment.⁵²⁵ At the same time, Pegasus uses the phone’s camera and microphone to closely monitor the target, even when the phone appears to be turned off.⁵²⁶

Further, cartels monitor social media such as Facebook and apps like WhatsApp to target residents.⁵²⁷ Because of the pervasive use of social media accounts, many cartel targets have reported that it is easy for transnational cartels and gangs to find their “enemies” wherever they go.⁵²⁸ In Guerrero, criminal groups create fake accounts and post hit lists on Facebook and WhatsApp, using nicknames and crude language to describe their targets.⁵²⁹ Mariana, a former Chilapa resident who sought asylum in the United States, stated that “[a]t first, when the lists started appearing, people just went about their daily lives. They figured since they were not involved in crime, they had nothing to fear.”⁵³⁰ However, Mariana explained “they started killing people and we quickly recognized that being on one of these lists was going to get you killed.”⁵³¹

One Mexican asylum seeker was placed on an Internet hit list by the criminal gang Los Ardillos in Guerrero.⁵³² Over the next year, he was named on two additional hit lists posted by the same group but in different states throughout Mexico, suggesting that he would not be safe anywhere within the country.⁵³³ Tania Nuñez Amador, an immigration attorney based in California, stated that for her Mexican asylum clients, many of whom are from Guerrero, virtual threats were often “the breaking point,” that finally spurred them to flee and seek refuge in the United States.⁵³⁴ “They might know everything about you, if they were able to find you on social media.”⁵³⁵

VII. Appendix: representative case studies of asylum seekers from Guerrero

A. INTERVIEW WITH NICOLÁS

“You go out everyday to make a living and don’t know if you will see your family again. That is the hardest part.” Nicolás, a fish seller from Guerrero, understood how things worked under the power of an organized criminal group. He knew to pay the cuota when it was due. However, the cost of the cuota kept increasing, but the ability to work and gain financial stability was decreasing. After falling behind on a couple of payments, Nicolás received constant warnings from the cartel, who sent pictures of his children and family with threats that they would be killed because of his debts. Nicolás eventually obtained the money owed. But his cartel collector refused the payment, informing him they would collect it “the next time.” That same evening, as Nicolás was returning home from work, he was “kidnapped, raped and beaten, and left bloodied.” Nicolás was detained for three days, during which time he continued to face severe physical and sexual violence.

Nicolás, accompanied by his cousin, went to the local police station to report his ordeal. Within moments, they received a phone call from his uncle, the cousin’s father, who warned him to leave the station, because “they” were coming for him. Nicolás immediately left Guerrero and went into hiding for nearly three months. He later learned that his cousin, who had gone to the station with him, was found dead. Nicolás moved again, seeking safety further away. After nearly six months of hiding in this new location in Monterrey, over 1,200 km away from Guerrero, Nicolás was stopped by patrol officers one evening as he returned home from work. The officers escorted him home, studied his identification card, and stole his money. Shortly after, the cartel found him, even though Nicolás never shared his locations with anyone, not even his family in Guerrero.

B. INTERVIEW WITH ELENA

Elena, an indigenous woman, was subjected to physical and sexual assault, psychological torture, and extortion. Her family first endured the kidnapping, assault, and torture of her former husband. Elena retells the fear she felt, wondering where her husband was for three weeks and whether he was still alive. Elena’s husband, previously a teacher, returned after three harrowing weeks, beaten and scarred. He explained that he was rescued soon before he was taken to an area, near the coast, where captives are often tortured and disfigured with acid. Her husband’s psychological and physical trauma affected his ability to be a husband and a father, resulting in Elena’s secondhand trauma and causing their separation and Elena’s new role as a single mother.

Elena returned to her hometown with her son. Afraid to practice as a lawyer, she worked in the market and cleaned houses. However, “the ‘mafia’ would come [to the market] with guns, asking for cuotas.” Elena “was always struggling to find a safe job.” She then found a job working in an office, but she was subjected to sexual harassment. Elena tried to report the assault to the respective authorities. However, she was almost immediately warned by a family member to leave because “they” were coming to find her and attack her.

Constantly surrounded by cartel members “out in [the] daylight with rifles,” Elena and her small child were forced to leave Guerrero, leaving behind the father of her children and her other children. Elena settled in a new place several states away from Guerrero, selling food and working different jobs. Soon thereafter, the cartel found her and threatened her at gunpoint to pay the cuota. Cartel members constantly extorted Elena and her family members to pay cuotas as soon as they began earning any money. This continued to happen regardless of where Elena tried to sell her goods. On one occasion, she was selling food outside her own house when cartel members came up to her, pressing against her and groping her body while pushing a gun against her ribs and asking questions about who worked for. She was given a last warning: even if she sold food in front of her home, she had to pay the cuota. In fear for her life, Elena took her child to a refugee shelter in Nogales, México, where she waited for nearly a year to come to the United States. At the shelter, cartels would try to recruit her child while she was at work. Elena now lives in the United States and was recently granted asylum.

C. INTERVIEW WITH MATEO

Mateo, inspired by his father and grandfather, sought to enter politics to improve the situation in his hometown. He became a leader of an independent party and would speak to others about the corruption in the country. Mateo soon faced harassment and threats by Los Ardillos cartel, as well as local government officials. At the same checkpoints where Nicolás and Elena were harassed (see above), Mateo was warned that something “terrible” would happen if he did not stop criticizing government corruption in Guerrero. On two separate occasions, cartel members, dressed in police uniforms, harassed and detained Mateo. They abducted him from public buses and robbed all his money and belongings. Mateo was also warned they would unleash “the tiger” on him if he continued his political ambitions. This threat referred to the cartels’ use of dangerous animals to torture detained persons.
