

May 2008

Family Photo

Yasmina Damjan Ellis

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.law.seattleu.edu/sjsj>

Recommended Citation

Ellis, Yasmina Damjan (2008) "Family Photo," Seattle Journal for Social Justice: Vol. 7 : Iss. 2 , Article 5.
Available at: <https://digitalcommons.law.seattleu.edu/sjsj/vol7/iss2/5>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Student Publications and Programs at Seattle University School of Law Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Seattle Journal for Social Justice by an authorized editor of Seattle University School of Law Digital Commons. For more information, please contact coteconor@seattleu.edu.

FAMILY PHOTO

by Yasmina Damjan Ellis

I remember the afternoon
My mother put me up for adoption—
I was 13,
maybe 12,
I don't remember for certain.
She said:
“Let's get in the car—
Let's drive real far...”
“Let's go get ice cream”
and also, “Isn't it a lovely day?”
How strange.
I looked toward my father,
who was not looking at me.
He would not offer an answer.
In the car, we did drive far.
The day was lovely, the wind was in my hair.
We turned into the police station,
there was no ice cream there.
She turned to me then,
Eyes streaming,
Cries filled with knives—
“You ungrateful thing!
You go live with someone else now.”
Someone else? There was no one else.
There were only the overstuffed chairs
in the station's waiting room.

And the yellow line
Painted on the curb.