

7-1-2012

No-No Darkness

Lawrence Matsuda

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.law.seattleu.edu/sjsj>

Recommended Citation

Matsuda, Lawrence (2012) "No-No Darkness," Seattle Journal for Social Justice: Vol. 11 : Iss. 1 , Article 14.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.law.seattleu.edu/sjsj/vol11/iss1/14>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Student Publications and Programs at Seattle University School of Law Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Seattle Journal for Social Justice by an authorized editor of Seattle University School of Law Digital Commons. For more information, please contact coteconor@seattleu.edu.

No-No Darkness

Lawrence Matsuda, poet

Suto-san refuses machine guns
and foxholes in Italy,
checks “No-No” on
the loyalty questionnaire.
Minidoka bunk, young wife
and two baby girls traded for steel bars and hard time
at McNeill Island Federal Pen.
His “No-No” brand exiles him to purgatory littered with conscientious objector leper rags,
an untouchable pariah.
Upon his release, old friends
cross the street to avoid him.
Others refuse to shake his hand.
He acts and looks like a regular Joe after President Truman’s pardon.
Gossip pursues him until he dies,
no forgiveness from Japanese neighbors.
He never asks for pardon,
lives his life in joy and celebration,
concocts his secret tsukenomo recipe, pickled cabbage full of zest and magic fermented under a large stone for weeks in a crock, Japanese sauerkraut that fumes noxious fragrances
when the lid is popped.

He always shares a jar with me.
In its salty tang.
I can taste the “No-No”
depth of his resolve.