About the Authors

Catalina Pérez Correa

Catalina Pérez Correa is a Professor and Researcher at the Center for Research and Teaching of Economics (CIDE) in Mexico. She received her LLM and JSD from the Stanford University Law School. Her research focuses on the study of legal procedures and practices—particularly the functioning of the criminal justice system—from an interdisciplinary perspective. She has conducted several surveys in Mexican prisons to study prison conditions, due process rights, inmates and their families, and prison guards. She also studies gender in the criminal justice system and drug policy in Latin America.

She is currently a visiting fellow at the Schell Center for International Human Rights at the Yale University Law School.

Susan Grover and Nikeshia Womack

Susan Grover and Nikeshia Womack Arthur researched this project while Nikeshia was a third-year law student at William & Mary. Today, Nikeshia is Assistant Director for Civil Rights Compliance and Deputy Title IX Coordinator at Virginia Tech. Susan is William & Mary Law Professor Emeritus, having retired after 29 years of service on the law faculty and, more recently, as William & Mary's Vice Provost for Academic & Faculty Affairs.

Donald H.J. Herman

Donald H.J. Herman is a professor of Law and Philosophy at DePaul College of Law. He served as a United States Supreme Court Judicial Fellow during Chief Justice Burger's term, was appointed a Law & Humanities Fellow at Harvard University, and was a Law & Economics Fellow at the University of Chicago. He completed his doctoral studies in Philosophy at Northwestern University and postdoctoral study in art history, theory and criticism at the School of the Art Institute.

Nikos Koutras

Nikos works as postdoctoral research at the Faculty of Law of the University of Antwerp. He holds a doctoral degree in Political Science (Department of Foreign Languages, Translation and Interpretation, Ionian University, Greece, 2014) and a doctoral degree in Copyright Law (Macquarie Law School, Australia, 2017). He is currently developing his research at the interface between copyright governance and open access, which is a very original approach to open access.

Archie Roundtree

Archie Roundtree, a southern California native, pursued his passion and volunteered many years with at risk youth from diverse cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds. It fueled his interest in public policy, and the legal profession. He received his B.A. from California State University Northridge where he served as Director of Marketing and Director of Finance, for the CSUN Pre-Law Association. Archie is a 3L Law student at Seattle University School of law. He serves on the Alternative Dispute Resolution Board, Black Law Student Association and the Seattle Journal for Social Justice. Archie was also selected as the 2nd place winner of the esteemed 2017 WSBA Construction Law Section Legal Writing Competition. Archie's love of litigation led him to compete in 2017 fall – James E. Bond ABA Moot Court Competition and 2017 National Sports Law Negotiation Competition. During law school, Archie gained invaluable experience in research, and pleadings for active litigation, briefings, and trial proceedings. He worked as a Summer Associate with the law offices of Schroeter Goldmark & Bender. Prior to this position, he was a summer intern at Blue Water Legal.

Archie would like to thank SJSJ and team members for featuring his article. A special thanks to the Legal Writing program, professors, staff, internship employers, and others who have been most supportive throughout the process. He also gives credit to his strong faith, family and great friends.

Dalton Thacker

Dalton Thacker is a 3L at Seattle University School of Law. He attended Simpson University on a full scholarship to play basketball where he earned California Pacific Conference Freshman of the Year, three time All Conference selection, and CALPAC Player of the Year. He also attained an NCCAA All American Honorable Mention. While living the life of a collegiate athlete, Dalton witnessed first-hand the grueling schedules that athletes all around the country are enduring as well as the financial struggles that many face. With his article, Dalton hopes to shed some light on this injustice and to initiate change that leads to the end of the exploitation of college athletes.

Whitney Wootton

Whitney Wootton is a Texas native and received her undergraduate degree in International Studies from Texas A&M University in 2009. As a student at Seattle University School of Law, Whitney has been deeply involved in Seattle University's chapter of the International Refugee Assistance Project, was an Access to Justice Institute First Year Fellow, and completed an externship with Kids in Need of Defense in Seattle. She plans to practice immigration law after graduation, with a focus on policy and advocacy in the areas of asylum, removal defense, and family-based immigration.
